ON WHOLESALE TREE DESTRUCTION.

What William Cullen Bryant Thought Sineteen Years Ago-The Fatal Effect of Denuding a Country,

While Congress is occupied with the lisposition of the public lands, it has been suggested, by persons who can think of something else besides railroads, that it will be an act of provident wisdom to reserve considerable tracts of forest in public domain, with a view of preventing the destruction of trees which is so rapidly proceeding, and which may yet lead to inconvenient consequences. One of the objections to any such measure as this is the difficulty of protecting the forests from depredation. What is the public domain it regarded in most parts of our country as, in a certain sense, common property, from which any man may take what he has occasion for. In order to prevent the trees from being felled and the public property wasted, a body of forresters to watch it and keep out trespassers must be retained in the pay of the government.

retained in the pay of the government,

We do not propose here to discuss the merits of any such plan, but we would refer our readers to the extracts we have made in another part of this paper from Dr. Piper's work on the "Trees of Amer ica" as opening a very important subject for their consideration. We are fully persuaded, for our part, that scarcely anything is more prejudicial to the fertility of a country or has a worse effect on its climate than the thoughtless practice of denuding it of trees. The effect is to open the region to the winds, which parch the surface and dwarf the vegetation ; to cause the springs to dry up, and turn the water courses into torrents in the rainy season and dusty channels in summer and autumn. If the public could but be thoroughly convinced of this truth, it might, perhaps, be unnecessary for the government to give itself any concern him. He proved to be one of the men about the matter in the disposition of the public lands. We should see the high-ways skirted by double rows of trees, long lines of plantations following the courses of the railroads, belts of forest trees planted to break the force of the winds and shelter the tender crops and Travellers see in the Orkney and Shetland Isles a remarkable example of the unfavorable effect of the winds on vegetaion, and the kindly influence of shelter. There, within the high garden walls shrubs and trees grow and flourish till their summits reach the top of the wall, and beyond that they do not rise. Strong winds sweep almost constantly over the surface of the islands and prevent the growth of any vegetable production ex-cept those which flower and perfect their fruit near the surface. Within the enclosures of these stone fences, where the wind is excluded, or in hollows which form a natural screen, the vegetation is often juicy and luxuriant Of the effect of the destruction of forests in drying up a country the Old World affords many remarkable instances. The poets and historiaus of antiquity speak of mighty forests which are now shadowless wastes, and of streams that flow no longer. Ad dison thus laments the disappearance of rivers and brooks celebrated in ancient the orchards which bear fruit.

Sometimes, misguided by the tuneful throng, I look for streams immortalized in song That lost in silence and oblivion lie; Dumb are their fountains, and their channels dry. Yei ran forever by the mas s' skill. And, in the smooth description, murmur still.

The streams of Attica, now a bare and treeless region, are for the most part but mere water courses, in which the rains pass to the sea, and disappoint those who form their ideas of them from the aucient

The rivers of Spain are for the most part only channels for the winter rains. The Guadalquivir, which some poet calls "a mighty river," enters the sea at Malaga without water enough to cover the loose black stones that pave its bad. The Holy Land now often misses "the latter rain," or receives it but sparingly; and the brook Kedron is a long, dry ravine, passing off to the eastward from Jersula lem to descend between perpendicular walls besides the monastery of Mar Saba to the valley of the Jordan and the Dead Sea. Mr. Marsh, in his very instructive book entitled "Man and the Nature," interior of the state of New York, after a te-dious night ride of many miles "I have showing how, in the Old World, the destruction of the forests has been followed > quent rains restored to a country by plant ing groves and orchards we cannot say but we remember, when traveling at the West thirty-three years since, to have met with a gentleman frem Kentucky who spoke of an instance within his knowledge in which a perennial stream had made its appearance where at the early settlement of the region there was none. Kentucky, when its first colonist planted themselves within its limits, was a region in which extensive prairies, burnt over every year by the Indians, predominated.

> More than forty years sines a poet of our country, referring to the effect of stripping the soil of its trees, put these lines in the mouth of one of the aboriginal inhabitants :

Those grateful sounds are heard no more; The springs are sitent in the sun: The rivers, by the blackened shore With lessening currents run. The realm our tribes are crushed to get May be a barren desert yet.

trees is covered with a thick carpeting of fallen leaves, which absorb the power and prevent the water from passing immediately into the streams and hurrying to the Part of the moisture thus confined under the fallen leaves, and shielded from evaporation by sun and wind, finds its way slowly into the veins of the earth, rises in springs, and runs off in rivulets part is gradually drawn up by the rootlets of the trees and given off to the air from the leaves, to form the vapors, which are afterward condensed into showers. We fear that this statement of the process is somewhat commonplace, but we make it here because, though obvious enough, it is too little in the minds of those whose interest it concerns to notice it. Thus it is that forests protect a country against drought, and keep its streams constantly flowing and its wells constantly full. Cut lown the trees, and the moisture of the showers passes rapidly off from the sur-face and hastens to lakes and to ocean.

A Determined Elopement.

The little borough of Parsons, a suburb of Wilkesbarre, is discussing with excitement an unusual elopement. James Crow, parents forbade Crow the house, but in stolen interviews he persuaded the heedless child to run away with him. Sunday evening she started apparently for church, but instead met her lover at an appointed spot and fled with him in a carriage.

The girl's parents soon learned of her flight. Their anger and despair knew no bounds. Her father has started in pursuit yowing to be revenged, but he was totally vowing to be revenged, but he was totally unable to find any trace of the fugitives beyond the neighboring town of Forty Fort, where he learned that they had been made one flesh by a justice of the peace. He has returned home and says he will immediately begin proceedings against the justice for marrying a minor.

was the scene, at an early hour Tuesday morning, of a lively fight with burglars. A gang of half a dozen broke open a rear window of the eigar factory of William M. Jacobs and proceeded to carry away a lot of cigars and other goods. Mr. Jacobs, who was sleeping with another man in the room above, was awakened, and taking his revolver went down in the wareroom to investigate. When he reached the floor he observed through the dim light three men carrying a large lot of cigars outside. He opened fire on them at a rapid rate. The thieves returned several shots, but without effect. Mr. Jacobs heard groans from one of the burglars heard groans from one of the scaped and started after them, but they escaped in the darkness to a wagon which was in waiting for them and drove away. Six shots were fired by Mr. Jacobs. During the excitement the thieves dropped about ten thousand cigars, which they had taken. Mr. Jacobs and J. Knetz armed themselves at daybreak and went in pursuit of the burglars. When they approached the Hill Top, about one mile from Coopers-burg, they noticed a man acting strangely.

him. He proved to be one of the men wanted. He offered no resistance when told he was their prisoner. His left arm was shot and broken between the arm was shot and elbow and shoulder and several balls passed through the fleshy part of his legs. He was nearly dead from the loss of blood. He was taken to East Greenville in charge of Constable Griezmer and given a hearing before Alderman C. Weard and will be taken to the Norris town jail. His condition is reported critical. He gave his name as William Fogel. He is tall, has a dark moustache dark complexion and is about 45 years old. He said that two more of the gang were slightly wounded. A party is in hot pursuit of the rest of the gang and Hill Top is intested with these outlaws, Ducks charge everybody with being a "quack," and there are but few who are exempt from the gosling accusation. Dr. Bull's cough Syrup is certainly an exception to the rule, as it is no doubt, the greatest remedy offered to a suffering people. "LOOK JUT FOR THE ENGINE.

ALICE E. CURTIS, of Brunswick, Me., writes us on May 15, 1833; "That she has suffered very much at frequent intervals with kidney disease, and the attacks were increasing in severity so steadily as to cause alarm. Her aunt Mrs. N. M. Small, persuaded her to use Hunt's Remedy, and after using several bottles. Miss Curtis has been freed from the severe aches and pains to which she had long been accusomed; and further says that Hunt's Remedy never falls to relieve the severe pains in the side and intense backache, and Mizs C. pro-
