

A MAD STEER.

taught school in the township of Conoy, West Hempfield and East Donegal. He is now confidential clerk of the agent of the Pennsylvania railroad company in New York city.

Among the largest feeders of cattle in the lower end of the county is Samuel Nisley, who lives on and owns the Scott Nisley farm, near Mechanics Grove. This year he has a very fine herd; every day there are turned into the barnyard for water.

On Thursday last the weather was not so genial; one of them jumped over the fence into the public road, when it immediately became mad or at least seemed so. With a yell it started off, running as far up as Mr. Hays church and clearing the road of everything it went.

At the mention Mr. Nisley, who rode after him, had given the alarm and a large crowd went in pursuit, but were afraid to get close to it. Late on Thursday night he was destroyed in a field of J. Collins, where it was presumed he would come down and be captured in the morning; but such was not the case, for it found him fully a way away again on Friday morning.

The play is wonderfully adapted to bring out the strong emotional side of an actor's genius as an actress, excelling as she does in the delineation of heavy tragedy. From her first appearance in the play proper, the centre of a new striking peasant girl, she held her audience in breathless attention and the association of an actress with the play, the bitter anguish blended with a certain joy that fills Rudin's breast when she finds her first daughter the idol of a wealthy and noble family.

The marked German accent that distinguishes Januszek's rendering of the impassioned scenes, is so well adapted to describe. At the close of the first and third acts the great tragedienne was compelled to go before the curtain in response to vigorous applause. Her support was excellent. Miss Virginia Brooks as Francesca Bonaparte, the young girl who comes as a bride to the nobleman as a noble carrying off the honors for the ladies and Mr. George D. Chapin as Hector Parvante and Mr. Giles Shine as Matti Truffi for the men.

COLUMBIA NEWS.

Yesterday was missionary day at the Methodist church. Both of the Sunday schools of this church participated in the interesting services which were held in the afternoon. For the missionary fund the Cookman chapel set a contribution of $70, and the church school $101.49. Total contributions were therefore $171.49. At the morning service in the church $179.44 were contributed to reach the sum of $650 required to be taken by the pastor to the approaching conference at Philadelphia.

To-night the eighth anniversary of the organization of Cookman's chapel Sunday school will be celebrated by appropriate exercises at the chapel. Doors open at 7 o'clock, and the service will commence at 7:30. Rev. S. D. C. Jackson conducted last evening's prayer meeting at the Columbia fire engine house. It was the largest yet held there. About 50 freemen afterwards marched in body to the Baptist church to hear Mr. Jackson preach.

Mr. Charles Bates, of Baltimore, is visiting Mr. James D. Slade. Miss Hattie Miller, late the guest of the family of Mr. J. H. Miller, returned to her home in Philadelphia yesterday. Mr. James Wilson has entered the service of the Philadelphia & Reading railroad company at Reading.

SECOND EDITION.

MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 3, 1884. IN PHILADELPHIA. LIVE SENSATIONS OF THE DAY. A Dispute between Two Telegraph Companies Settled by Foreigner—The Inquest over the Victim of Friday's Fire.

PHILADELPHIA, March 3.—A controversy between the Baltimore & Ohio and Western Union telegraph companies over the possession of an office in Third street, culminated today in the forcible ejection of the Western Union operator.

The matter came to a climax this afternoon by the Baltimore & Ohio company sending a force of men to the place where the Western Union operator was working. The operator, who had been in the office for some time, was ordered to leave.

The efforts to save John McGinnis, the man whose name was mentioned in the report of the inquest, failed. The jury recommended that the man be buried in the cemetery.
