THE GROUNDHOD.

Historical Vindication of His Uncerting That we are on the verge of gentle spring none but the most ruthless skeptic will venture to doubt. Every devout be liever in that most intelligent of all through what vicissitudes of temperature. accurately predicted by that venerable sage, we have come to the vernal season. Some of our idle pated local contemporaries continue, in the face of indisputable fact and irrefutable argument, to maintain that the widespread and firmly established popular faith in the groundhog is founded ipon a myth. All such—if there is any hope whatever for them-we refer to the Columbia Spy's narrative of an incident of real occurrence, obtained, it tells us, from a veracious man, an eogineer on the Penn sylvania railroad. It says:

The workmen then took off the engine, put him in a box, covered him with buy, and nailed the box shat very securely. They then put the box in a neighboring cellar, and fast ned it to the wall about four feet from the ground, so that neither rats, cats nor dogs could get at the sleep ing weather prophet. They visited him daily about nine o'clock, but saw no signs of returning life. He was to all intents and purposes dead as a door pail.

About a week before groundhog day, the workmen at the Gap embankment of the Pennsylvania railroad dug out a big, fat grounding. He was apparently lifeless and was stiff as a poker. They put him at SNO. SCHOENBERGER, Prop. the workmen at the Gap embankment of and was stiff as a poker. They put him in the tank bucket of Engineer James Witherow's engine, No. 86, the augine used on the Gap railroad improvements, and set the bucket behind the boiler, to see if he could be thawed out and brought to life. But it didn't work, and Mr. Groundbog continued to exhibit that same stubborn indifference to warmth and life that usually characterizes animals of this class in mid-winter.

On February 2d-groundtog day-there was a change, however. When they called on him that morning, about nine o'clock, they found him as lively as a cricket. Duing the night or early morning be had eaten his way out through the box jamped down on the cellar floor, and was running around as frisky as a spring lamb. The facts and eigenmatagoes created a good bit of interest in the case, about the Gap, and many people came to see him During these visits some one left the door op u, and a dog got into the cellar, and killed the groundhog. This ended his career as a

On the 3d of Februry, one day after, the workmen on the embankment dug out another ground hog, but they found him stiff and dormant, and they put him back into his little bed. He had no doubt been out on the second, saw his shadow and went back to his hole for six weeks' more of peaceful hibernation. Great is the ground hog as a weather proplet, Opposing the War in Torquin.

Paris, March 15.—The Left in the Chamber of Deputies intend to oppose a continuance of warlike operations in Tonquin. They are opposed to any further sacrifice of merit and expenditure of money.

The Battle in Torquin.

Advices have been received from Bac Ninh, China, dated yesterday. These state that Gen Negrier, who led the French forces, which advanced from Haidzeing, encountered the enemy at Xsiroy between Sangethong and Lagbudi. A severe battle ensued. The enemy were at last forced to retreat and the French forces pursued them into Bac Ninh by the Langson road. The enemy evacuated the town in great disorder and the French continued to pursue them in the direction of Thaingnyun.
