TUESDAY EVENING, APRIL 16, 1884.

Philadelphia newspapers seem to have a large interest in the white elephant. Their unsophisticated readers will learn, after they have spent their half dollars to see the elephant, that they have been defrauded by a conspiracy between the newspapers and the manager of the show.

The longer a man lives the more he finds out. The New Era announces this bit of consolation, which it takes to itself amid the tribulations of defeat.

Three years ago whatever of victory its associates achieved was by methods which marked those who resorted to them as anything but friends of political reform; and in all its experience we can see no reason why the New Era should have waited until the hour of its supreme defeat to discover and cast off its fellowship such as seemed to care more about the success of their candidates for county treasurer than the judge or Congress.

Having shouted hosannas over the triumphs of McMullen, Sensing, Johnson and Mentzer in turn, the New Era must have experienced a violent change of stomach, indeed, that it cannot digest the returns of 1884, nor make merry with Lew Hartman in his glee at electing "Honest" Jay Grider, and with Bill Shirk in his joy at ringing his Hog Ringers into the county books.

The Harrisburg Telegraph says that we are wrong in assuming that the increase of the duty on wool will add to its price. If so, why does the wool grower want the increased duty? Does the Telegraph desire us to understand that the wool grower desires to promote lower prices for his product? If so, will it please say so specifically, as we do not feel like assuming that it asks this of our understanding.
