PAUL VARGAS.

A MYSTERY IN MEDICINE.
By Hugh Conway.

Hour after hour, day after day, Paul Vargas lay, unable to move or speak; yet I felt sure in full possession of his mental faculties. Several times I noticed, when the door was opened, a look of dread come into his eyes. He breathed faster when he saw that the new comer was the nurse or myself. This puzzled me, for, as I suspected, he had willed that I should write a letter and send it to the proper place, his look should have been one of hope and expectancy, instead of this playing unmistakable signs of fear.

Although Vargas often gave me the impression that he was trying to subject me again to that strange influence, it was only once more that he attained anything like success. One day, grown bold at finding I had as yet avoided a repetition of my thraldom, and, perhaps egged on by curiosity, I met his strange fixed gaze half way and defied him to conquer me. In a moment or two I had raised my eyelids, and he was—although I blush to say it—I felt that in another second I must yield to him, and as before, do all he wished. At that critical moment the nurse entered the room and spoke to me. Her voice, instead of breaking the spell, "Thank God, it was I! Vargas was sending an impulse into my mind—urging me in some way which I knew would be irresistible—to perform, not some harmless task, but to go to my medical bag and fetch a dose of laudanum heavy enough to send him to sleep forever. And I say, without hesitation, that had the woman not entered the room at that very moment, I should have been forced to do the man's bidding.

After this fresh attempt to coerce me, I was almost afraid to leave him alone with the nurse. I even took the precaution of being present when Dr. Jones, out of professional curiosity, paid him an occasional visit. His presence, like the nurse's, had a restraining effect on me, and I felt that his visit would have been a relief. But alas! he had given him that poison it would have been a relief. But alas! he had given him that poison it would have been a relief.

A SKEPTIC SAID
Although he had predicted his own death, why was Paul Vargas so anxious to die, why was he so ready to make his last days short? If I had given him that poison it would have been a relief. But alas! he had given him that poison it would have been a relief.

A soft look, a look that echoed her own, came over the sufferer's face—a look of infinite tenderness and deathless love. But it was transient. His eyes grew stern; I fancied they tried to drive her away; then, as she heeded not his commands, they brought a appalling appeal. He, in vain—the strange girl laughed joyfully as a bride who welcomes her bridegroom. Then, with a weary sigh, Paul Vargas closed his eyes from never more to open. I thought, to reopen them, I went to his side.

He was not dead; but he bore infinite signs of approaching dissolution. Practically, it was little moment whether he died now or in an hour's time. Nothing could save him. Still, the wish one always feels to prolong the faintest flicker of life prompted me to speak to Myrrha.

"The excitement will kill him," I whispered. She sprang to her feet as if stung. She threw me a glance so full of horror that I started. Then, bending over Vargas, she satisfied herself that he still breathed.

"Go," she whispered, fiercely. "Leave me alone with my love. Take that woman with you, if you will, but do not let her see me. I hesitated. I wanted to see the end. But I could not dispute the sacred claims of love and grief, or help sympathizing with the girl in her desire to be alone with the dying man. My duties were ended. I could not let the nurse see me, but I present mysterious garb had conquered me. The man must die. How could he die better than in the arms of the woman he loved?"

I motioned to the nurse to leave the room. I followed her through the door; then turned to take my last look at Paul Vargas. He was lying apparently unconscious. Myrrha had thrown herself on the bed by his side. His poor pale face was drawn up to her, and his hands were clasped about her. Her arms were wreathed around him, holding him to her. The contrast between life and death—between the rich, strong glowing life of the young girl, and that of the man now ebbed away in his last few seconds, was startling.

I closed the door reverently. My eyes filled with tears and I sighed for the sorrow which was about to fall on the devoted, passionate creature. How would she bear it? Then I went toward my room, knowing that when I returned home, I should have a patient the less.

I rode some miles into the country, to see a miner who had met with an accident which would most likely prove fatal. Just as I reached his cabin, Paul Vargas, well and soundly, lay in his bed. I had done all I could for the injured man, started to return home. There was nothing for it but to leave my horse to be fetched the next day, and to wait for him at New Durham.

I strode on as briskly as the nature of the track would allow. As I trudged along I thought of Myrrha and Paul Vargas, and wondered if by any chance I should find him alive when I returned. I was so preoccupied with these thoughts that, not until I was close to him, did I notice a man lying on the side of the track.

At first I thought it was one of the common sights of the neighborhood—a man dead or dying in the street. I stepped forward, but I was not so bold. The man's back was towards me; his face was buried in the herbage; but I could hear him sobbing as if his heart was about to break. As he lay there he turned his eyes, and with wild gestures of despair—he dug his fingers into the ground and tore at it as one racked by unbearable torture. He was evidently a prey to some fearful bodily or mental distress. Whoever it was, I could not pass without proffering my assistance.

His agitation was so great that he had no idea of my proximity. I spoke, but my words fell unheeded. Sob after sob burst forth from him. "Get up," I cried, and placed my hand on his arm. "My poor fellow," I said, "what is the matter?"

"At my touch he sprang to his feet. God of Heaven! shall I ever forget that moment. I have stood Paul Vargas, well and strong, as when we parted some years ago in Constantinople!"

"What saved me from fainting I cannot tell. The man stood there before me—the very man I had left an hour or two ago at his last gasp. He stood there and as I approached he turned his eyes, and he was wringing his hands in agony. "Speak! I could not have fashioned a word. My tongue clave to my palate. My lips were parched and dry. All I could do was to stare at him, with chattering teeth, bristling hair and ice cold blood."

"Go home," he said. "Go home and learn how the strongest may tremble at death—at what cost life will buy life—how the selfish clamor to live can conquer love. You asked me once if I could not prolong life. You are answered. You brought her to me—you yielded then, but not the second time when I would have undone the dead. Go home, before I kill you."

"Something in his whole bearing struck me with deadly terror—a natural human terror. I turned and fled for my life, until my limbs refused to bear me longer. Then I sank on the ground and I believe, lost consciousness."

When I recovered I made the best of my way home, telling myself as I walked along that overwork and want of sleep were acting on me. I had dreamed an absurd horrible dream. I opened the door of the room in which I had left Paul Vargas, dying in the arms of the woman who loved him. I death had been there during my absence. I knew the meaning of that long shapeless form stretched out on the bed covered by the white sheet. Yet I trembled more and more. The words I had heard in my supposed dream came to me clear and distinct. It was some time before I could summon courage enough to move the covering from the dead face. It did so at last and I believe shrieked aloud.

Lying there in her black funeral dress her fair hands crossed on her breast, her woe-begone face still bearing a smile, lay the girl whom I knew only by the name of Myrrha—dead!

When Howard wrote: "I find a pity hangs upon my breast," the fellow had evidently said and had not yet been informed that Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup was the only safe remedy.

Ask the most eminent physician of any school, what is the best thing in the world for quieting and allaying all irritation of the nerves and curing all forms of nervous complaints, giving natural, childlike refreshing sleep always?

What is the best and only remedy that can be relied on to cure all diseases of the kidneys and urinary organs; such as Bright's disease, diabetes, retention of urine, or inability to resist the power, and all the diseases and ailments peculiar to Women?

What is the most reliable and surest cure for liver diseases or dyspepsia; constipation, indigestion, biliousness, neuralgic fever, ague, etc., and they will tell you as unhesitatingly as some form of "Hops"?

What is the best and only remedy that can be relied on to cure all diseases of the kidneys and urinary organs; such as Bright's disease, diabetes, retention of urine, or inability to resist the power, and all the diseases and ailments peculiar to Women?

From agony of neuralgia, nervousness, wakefulness and various diseases peculiar to women. People drawn out of shape from excruciating pains of rheumatism. In inflammatory and chronic, or suffering from neuralgia.

Having been cured by Hop Bitters, proof of which can be found in every neighborhood in the known world.

Something to be avoided. Babies with colds have with croup, babies with scalds, burns, bites, aches, sprains, or pains are bound to become noisy infants of the household. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will cure all these complaints. For sale by H. B. Cochrane, druggist, 127 and 129 North Queen Street.

A Remarkable Escape.
Mrs. Mary A. Dabney, of Tanhannock, Pa. was afflicted for six years with Asthma and Bronchitis, during which time she lost weight, was unable to get any relief. Her life was despaired of, until in last October she procured a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery, when immediate relief was felt, and by continuing its use for a short time she was completely cured, gaining in flesh 30 lbs. in a few months. Free Trial Bottles of this certain cure of all Throat and Lung Diseases, at G. A. Lechner's Drug Store, Large Bottles $1.00.

I Wish Everybody to Know.
Rev. George H. Traylor, an old citizen of this vicinity known to every one as a most influential Christian minister of our city, and as a church just this moment stopped in our store to say, "I wish everybody to know that I have used Dr. King's New Discovery for my own relief, and I wish to see you over to Sisson's Consumption Cure. It is having a tremendous sale over our country, and giving perfect satisfaction in all cases of Lung Disease, such as nothing else has done.
