THE OLD PRINTER.

paper Composing Room-Burdette's Last and Best.

WAY HE LINGERED WITH "4D 13," sketch of Life Behind the Scenes in a News

"Slug Nine" learned his letters right from the boxes, and grow up and learned to set type in one of those mustang offices where they keep the type in a coffee sack and chalk out the cases on the floor. He wasn't even a very fast printer; he didn't often rush, and he never "sol-diered for the fat on the hook," but took whatever came along with equal patisnee and good nature, whether it was a "pick up" or a great take of blind copy, scrib up" or a great take of blind copy, solld bled in penell on blue feelscap on both sides of the paper and marked solid, with never a break or paragraph from A to Z. But he would stand at that old case and pick up type all night, pegging along on straight brevier as tranquilly as though he struck a display head on every take. He always made fair bills, and, after awhile, as the sixties began creeping on him, the boys had a way of "soldiering" for him, and maybe you don't know how hard it is for a printer not to drop a good many type and fumble for the boxes and let his thumb get most awfully sore, and have to hunt for the bellows and blow out his case and study the copy very closely and find hours. it dreadfully hard to read, and that sort of thing, when, by rushing a little, he can get a "pick up" as long as your arm and a leaded take with a paragraph to every sentence. But they did that for the old man, and he knew it by and by, and leved the boys as though they and loved the boys as though they were his own, every last slug of them. And so, year after year, he wrought among the boys on a morning paper. He went to bed about the time the rest of the world got up, and he rose about the time the rest of the world sat down to dinner. He worked by every kind of light except sunlight. There were candies in the office when he came in, then they had lard oil lamps, that smoke I and sputtered and smelled; then he saw two or three printers blinded by explosions of camphene and spirit gas; then kerosene came in and heated up the news room on summer nights like a furnace; then the office put in gas, and now the electric light hung from the ceiling and dazzled his old eyes and glared into them from his copy. If he sang on his way home, a policeman bade him "cheese that," and reminded him that he was disturbing the peace, and people wanted to sleep. But when he wanted to sleep the rest of the world, for whom he had sat up all night to make a morning paper, roared and crashed by down the noisy street under his window, with cart, and truck, and omnibuses; blared with brass bands, howled with hand organs, taiked and shouted, and even the shricking newsboy, with a ghastly sarcasm, murdered the sleep of the tired old printer by yelling the name of his own paper. Year after year the foreman roared at him to remember that this wasn't in afternoon paper; editors shricked down the tube to have a blind man put on that dead man's case; smart young proofroom and sanctum filled and emptied, and filled and emptied again, and filled again with new and strange fires. He was working one night, and when the hours that are so short in the ball room and so long in the composing room drew wearity on, he was tired. He hadn't thrown in a full case, he said. One of the boys, tired as himself—but a printer is never too tired to be good natured-offered to change places with him, but the old man said there was enough in the case to last him through his take, and he wouldn't work any more to night. The types clicked in the silent oom, and by and by the old man said : "I'm out of sorts."

He sat down on the low window sill by his case, with his stick in his hand his hands folded wearily in his lap. The types clicked on. A galley of relegraph waited, "Will any one kindly tell me what gentleman is lingering with D 132" called the foreman, who was always dangerously to speak to the old man sitting there quietly.

The telegraph boy came running in with the last manifold, sheet, shouting: "Thirty!" They carried the old man to the fore man's long table and laid him down rever ently and covered his face. They took the stick out of his nerveless hand and read his

FIRST BLOOD FOR BLAINE.

Desperate Political Fight in a Fennsylvania Village. A desperate political quarrel with a ter-tible tragical ending occurred in Livernews had been received of the nomination of Mr. Blaine at Chicago. If the feeling manifested among Republicans over the action of the Chicago convention is a compactly cured.

I never fail to recommend it, and you are at liberty to use my name in any many many in the convention. proves as bitter e'sewhere, repetitions of such horrible episodes may be confidently looked for. The men involved in the desperate and bloody affray were Jas. Hogan, Elwood Strauss, Casper Boyer and four-others, all farmers. The three men named are Stalwart Republicans and when they were told that Blaine had wen the battle they grew wild with rage and openly denounced the Maine statesman in terms that would have done credit to a Liver pool costermonger. Others in the party defended Blaine and a war of words ensued, but before coming to blows the gang ser arated. Shortly after the party adjourned to a neighboring bar room, and as the Stal-warts drowned their sorrows in the flow-ing bowl their belligerant qualities were developed. Hogan began the trouble by getting into a heated argument with a Blaine man and endeavored to enforce the stength of his views with a ratiling blow. Instantly the men clinched and a rough and tumble fight began. Efforts were The FASHIONABLE MERCHANT TAILORS made to separate the combatants but without success, and in a few moments without success, and in a few moments the dozen or more men in the saloon were engaged in a free fight. Knives were drawn and used effectively, revolvers were waipped out of back pockets and fired recklessly and blows were exchanged between the belligerents in darkness. The crowd were, however, so in darkness. The crowd were, however, so frenzied with excitement—all being half drunk—that the battle was waged flercely in the darkness, the men slashing right and left with their bowie knives and using chairs and other improvised weapons. For fully a quarter of an hour the men fought like tigers, and were finally ejected by the proprietor, who had been reinforced by a number of his friends.

The door was barred, and when a light

The door was barred, and when a light was brought in the three men were found lying on the floor. They proved to be Hogan, Boyer and a farmer named James Weiss. Hogan had been shot through the right thigh and had a terrible stab wound in the abdomen. Boyer received sever distinct knife wounds and was shot through the arm, and Weiss had been stabbed twice severely in the right side. The announcement made to the howling mob outside that the three men had been killed quieted them and they dispersed. A physician was summoned and, after dress ing the wounds of the injured, expressed but little hope of their recovery. Warrants were issued for the arrest of twenty persons who figured in the row. All cerned have been regarded as respectable men, and it is supposed that not less than thirty five persons participated in the row.

The deaths of Hogan and Weiss are reported and if they are not already dead they cannot survive more than a few

Ex-Marshal Hall to be Prosecuted.

The attorney general has sent a letter to Representative Springer saying that criminal proceedings are about to be commenced against John Hall, late United States marshal of the Western district of Pennsylvania. Examiner Ballin, who investigated Marshal Hall's accounts, has been ordered to go to Pittsburg, to appear before the grand jury. The action of the attorney general is based on a letter from United States District Attorney Stone, of Pittsburg, who says: "I have investigated the reports of Mr. Ballin, examiner of the department of justice, and in many cases I have compared them with the dockets and papers on file and believe the reports of Mr. Ballin to be in the main correct, and that the emolument returns of Marshal Hall are incorrect as to the earnings and receipts reported from individuals, and that he has earned and received from individuals much more than he reported in emolument returns made Jupe 30, 1881, and December 31, 1881, and June 1, 1883 These emolument returns are the only ones he has made within the past three years, and are the only ones for the making of which he can be prosecuted, the rest being barred by the statute of limitation. I am prepared to institute oriminal proceedings against him at
