ABOUT ANIMALS.

CURIOUS STORIES ABOUT BRUTES.

An Interesting Budget of True Stories Gathered from the Four Quarters of the Globe.

A correspondent of the London Times says:

"It may interest your readers to know that I have just lost a canary which was given to me in the spring of 1866, being then in full song. Until within a few days of his death, although he rarely sang during the day, his song was strong and sweet in the morning and evening. He must have been at least fifteen years old, and he succeeded one whom I had in my possession fifteen years."

A very good spider and fly story is told on the authority of Mr. Thomas Bell, the naturalist, who witnessed the heroic act: "A very strong, loud, blustering fellow of a bluebottle fly bounced accidentally into a spider's web. Down rushed the old spider, and threw her long arms round his neck; but he fought and struggled, and blew his drone, and battered and tore the web into holes, and so got loose. The spider would not let go his hold, and the fly flew away with the spider."

Discoursing of the courtesy of birds, a correspondent of the London Spectator remarks that "every observer of the habits of domestic fowls must be familiar with the gallantry of the barndoor cock, who, when he discovers a dainty morsel, summons his herem to the banquet, and stands aloof while the ladies eat, not tasting himself. It is well that there should be a redeeming feature in the character of that fire eating, pompous and tyrannical creature, who possesses, perhaps no other respectable trait except undoubted courage, which continues until he has been once well thrashed, when, as a rule, he becomes a wretched craven."

The following is a good cat and mouse story, if true. It seems to have been derived from a somewhat doubtful source, though we must admit the possibility. It was entitled by its author, "Melancholy Accident: A Cat Killed by a Mouse." A cat had caught a mouse on a lawn, and let it go again in her cruel way, in order to play with it; when the mouse, inspired by despair, and seeing only one hole possible to escape into, namely, the round red throat of the cat, very visible through her open mouth, took a bold spring into her jaws, just escaping between her teeth and struggled and stuffed himself into her throat, with the result that the cat was suffocated. It reads plausibly, and may possibly be true.

A Musical Owl.

The Rev. Leonard Jenyns, author of "Observations on Natural History," tells a good owl story. He knew a tame owl that was so fond of music that he would enter the drawingroom of an evening, and perching on the shoulders of one of the children listen to the piano-forte, holding his head first on one side and then on the other, after the manner of connoisseurs. One night suddenly spreading his wings, as if unable to endure the rapture any longer, he alighted on the keys, and driving away the fingers of the performer with his beak, began to hop about the keys himself, apparently in great delight with his own execution. This pianist was born in the woods of Northumberland, and belonged to a friend of the relator of this story.

As easy of belief, perhaps is the following: "In my neighborhood there lived two large and ferocious cats, which consorted together for the purpose of feloniously assaulting any unfortunate dog they might happen to meet. Their modus operandi was as follows:—Having selected their victim they would lie in wait for him behind a wall; then they would spring out, and while one jumped on his back and dug its claws into him, the other would lacerate his countenance in a manner frightful to behold. One day they treated in this manner, and half killed, a young collie, who naturally was much astonished and alarmed at their sudden onslaught, and fled precipitately with his tail between his legs. Next time, however he turned the tables on them by pretending not to notice them till they attacked him, when he got rid of the cat who sprang on his back by running under a fence; and then he returned to the charge, and slew the other cat, while the first, thinking it unsafe to risk further combat, fled for its life, and did not stop till it had put a good mile between itself and the dog, who, by his sagacity, had put a stop to the ill treatment of his canine fellow-creatures."

A Lordly Lion.

Dodrick Muller, during his hunting time in South Africa, happened on one occasion to come very suddenly upon a lion. The lion did not attack him, but he stood still, as though he would have said: "Well, what do you want here in my country?" Muller alighted from his horse and took deliberate aim at the animal's forehead; but just as he drew the trigger his horse gave a terrified start, and the hunter missed his aim. The lion sprang forward, but finding that the man stood still—for he had no time either to remount his horse or to take to his heels the lion stopped within a few paces, and stood still a so, confronting him. They stood looking at each other thus for some minutes; the man never moved and at last the lion slowly turned and walked away. Muller began hastily to reload his gun. The lion looked back over his shoulder, gave a deep growl and instantly returned. Could words have spoken plainer? Muller, of course, held his hand and remained motionless. The lion again moved off, warily as before. The hunter began softly to raise down the butlet. Again the lion looked back and gave a threatening growl. This was repeated between them until the lion had retired to some distance, when he bounded into a thicket and disappeared.

A Sympathetic Duck

Though the duck is considered a particularly uninteresting and prosaic animal, the same correspondent ventures to affirm that in point of intelligence, social kindness, and sagacity, he is vastly superior to the barndoor or any other cock or hen. He says:—"I have kept and closely watched hundreds of ducks; I never knew them to fight with each other, nor never knew a duck the aggressor in a dispute with some other kind of fowl. But I have witnessed striking instances of charity and kindness in ducks. Let one such case suffice. Amongst some fifty or sixty head of ducks and fowls, I once had a solitary, little, old bantam hen. She became blind, or nearly so, and like other birds in that condition 'sulked,' as it is called, i. e. kept by herself in a dark retired corner of the fowl house, knowing instinctively that her cruel and cowardly brethern and sisters would persecute her to death if she appeared amongst them. Here she might, perhaps, have starved, but for the constant and sympathetic attentions of a duck. Twice daily, every day so long as the poor bantam lived, some three weeks, this good Samaritan in the form of a duck was observed to fill her capacious beck with from twenty to thirty grains of barley, with which she proceeded to the fowl house, and there deposited her store immediately in front of the bantam. Several members of my family, as well as myself, were frequent witnesses of this beautiful incident."

Our Cousin, the Rat.

Gath, in Tribune.

We have a cousin we are harsh to—the rat. He crossed the ocean with us, and is almost as populous as we are in the pipes and sewers and basements beneath our homes. If he should invade the house with his hundred thousands we might scream, but if he should leave his hermitage and us for good we might die. He is the unpaid scavenger of man, bold and modest, merry, but undisturbing, and his brother, the squirrel in our cage, fed on sweet almonds by the children, is just as fierce. The rat is pretty, too, if one would believe it. His rodent species is as versatile as man, and several of our states are named for him: the Wolverine, the Gopher, the Prairie Dog. He will go with us, mariner and pioneer, for he is the son of the grainfield and camp follower of the reaper. Mills that he shuns lose their millstones by floods, ships he deserts the sailors will not ship with.

Getting Rid of Fleas.

Marion Cobb, a responsible gentleman of the Lusby's mill precinct, Ky., says he saw a squirrel acting in a very suspicious manner up in the top of a tree, and it caused him to stop and watch its actions. Pretty soon it came down the tree bearing a bunch of something in its mouth and went directly to the creek. When it got to the edge of the water it turned around and backed into the creek until the water covered it entirely, except the tip of its nose, when it let go the bunch, which floated off down the creek. To gratify his curiosity Marion went down and got the bunch, and found, he says, that it had a million fleas on it.

A Nimble Fish.

The fish liar is abroad in the land, and each one's story is good until another is told. The best one so far is related by the Montezuma Record of a little four year old who went home the other day with a portion of his trousers missing, and his father began to chide him about it and to question him as to where he had been. The little fellow, as quick as thought, told his father that he had been down to the creek and while he was walking along the bank a fish jumped out of the water, bit out the seat of his trousers and got back into the water before he had time to catch it.

The Latest Dog Fashion.

There is a new fashion in pschutt dog toilets, in Paris. A lady who possesses a fine Italian greyhound has just had prepared for it a very handsome jacket of English stuff for the summer season. On the left side of this garment she has with her own fair hands made a darling little "pootsy" pocket, in which, every morning before they go out for their promenade together, she places a fine linen hemstitched handkerchief bearing the wearer's initial, "Mirza," for that is the greyhound's name, and she is the envy of all other dogs on the boulevards.

A Rat Catches a Sparrow.

A curious scene was witnessed Saturday morning at the Stony Creek freight depot in Norristown. A number of sparrows were feeding on the platform, when a rat crept stealthily up and caught one of their number. The others, instead of taking flight, clustered around the intruder fluttering and making a great noise as though in hopes of frightening him into dropping his prey. They did not, however, venture on an actual attack, and the rat refusing to be frightened, disappeared under the platform with his victim.

A POLICEMAN'S DUTY.

Policeman Ed. K. Heath, 29 North Street, Portland, Me., May 11, 1883, writes:—

"I have been troubled for a good many years with inflammation of the bladder, dating as far back as during the time when I was in the army. I suffered with dull, heavy pains in the back and kidneys too intense for me to describe, and tried several remedies that were recommended, and was examined by one of our best physicians, who pronounced it inflammation of the bladder; and I went to the hospital for treatment, but all medicine and treatment had seemed to fail. I was recommended to try Hunt's Remedy, as it had been used in several such cases here in Portland and vicinity. I purchased a bottle at Smith's drug store here, and found after using the first bottle that it relieved me greatly, and after using several bottles found that it did me more good than all other medicines and treatment I have received combined. And to add to my good opinion of Hunt's Remedy, I beg to state in closing that my wife has been for a long time troubled with a weakness and inflammation of the bladder, with a complication of other diseases peculiar to women. After using only two bottles she has been completely cured; and I cannot say that my wife is loud in praise of this wonderful medicine, and I would highly recommend it to all who are suffering from kidney diseases or diseases of the bladder."

PORTLAND, Me., May 11, 1883.

I hereby certify that I know the facts of the sickness of Mrs. E. K. Heath, and that they are correctly stated in the foregoing certificate, and her cure was accomplished by the use of Hunt's Remedy. A. W. SMITH, Druggist, Cor. Portland and Green Streets.

NO MATERIAL CHANGE.

This is to certify that I have used Hunt's Remedy for the kidney complaint, and derived much benefit from its use.

I have been afflicted about one year, and received treatment from the local physicians, and used a number of so-called specifics without any material help. I am happy to say, after using three bottles of Hunt's Remedy, I was completely cured.

I never fail to recommend it, and you are at liberty to use my name in any manner you may desire. JOHN W. JOHNSTON.

Norwich, Conn., May 7, 1883. j9-1wdM,W&F&w

The first bottle relieved her very much, and the second bottle has absolutely cured her. She has not had so good health for thirty years." Trial bottles free at H. B. Cochran's drug store. I Wish Everybody to Know.

Rev. George H. Thayer, an old citizen of this vicinity known to every one as a most influential citizen and christian minister of the M. E. church, just this moment stopped in our store to say, "I wish everybody to know that I consider that both myself and wife owe our lives to Shiloh's Consumption Cure." It is having a tremendous sale over our counters and is giving perfect satisfaction in all cases of Lung Diseases, such as nothing else has done. DRS. MATCHETT & FRANCE. Bourbon, Ind., May 15, '75.
