SCOTT AND BURNS.

VISIT TO THEIR PAMOUS HOMES Graphic Details of Trips to Abbottstord and

Avn, Scotland, June 21, 1884. Yesterday morning we visited Melrose, distant from Edinburgh 37 miles. From there we were driven through a beautiful country, over shaded roads lined on either side by fine old beech and elm trees, in which this country abounds. We reach a gate at which we alight and go down a narrow walk until we arrive at Abbots-ford, the home of Sir Walter Scott. The house is not what we Americans would call pleasantly situated, as it is not visible from the road, being hidden by the high stone wall on the roadside. It is, how ever, a magnificent building, on which Sir Walter Scott spent vast sums of money. We enter a reception room, and upon ringing a bell, a guide appears. After payment of a shilling each, we are taken into the study, which remains as it was when Scott died in 1832. The large old leather arm chair in which he did all his writing, the desk in front, and numerous articles of rare value are there. In a small side room adjoining the study is a plaster cast of Sir

There is a gallery running around the the ceiling is oak panel richly carved. The library contains 20,000 volumes. There are in this room fancy articles of almost priceless value, many of them presents to told Li Fong Pao, the Chinese minister, the distinguished author from friends and that he held China directly responsible for admirers. Among them was an ebony cabinet by George IV, a pair of richly carved chairs by one of the popes, and a vase by Lord Byron. In a glass case were the dress of Mary Queen of Spots, the hair of Charles I, and Lord Nelson, the Prime N purse of Roy, etc.

Walter taken after death.

There are also paintings of Sir Walter, his wife, father, mother and sister, also a that China was guilty of foul treachery, very large painting of his son, who died young, a major in the army, representing him in full dress military costume. It would be impossible to describe the armory, has arrived. He blames General Millot for which contains all manner of arms of the not sending enough troops to expel the Roman and Feudal ages.

To those who have read Scott, a visit to this his home, where he achieved such listinction, is worth a trip across the Atlantic. From here we drove through Melrose to Drybury, distant 8 miles from Abbottsford This old abboy was founded by King David I, about 1136, but was des troyed by Edward II, in 1322. Robert I restored it, but it was destroyed again in 1544. Little now remains of its ancient magnificence. St. Mary's aisle, the most beautiful fragment, contains the tomb of Scott, who was buried here Sept. 26, 1832 Here also are the graves of his wife, his eldest son and his son in law, Lookhart. Returning, we have a short time before the train starts to visit Melrose Abbey. This fine old ruin, like Drybury, was built in the beginning of the 12th certary. These old abbeys were the scats of learn ing and missionary work in those days, and did a vast amount of good. They suffered much in the troublous times which followed, and finally fell into ruin. They disease, diabetes, retention, or mability to rewill always remain as monuments of the tain urine, and all the diseases and allments Christian zeal of their founders. King poculiar to Women "—

Alexander II, of Scotland, his wife, the herat of Robert Burns, many of the renown phatically, "Buchu !!!" herat of Robert Burns, many of the renown ed earls of Douglas and Michael Scott, the Last Minstrel, made famous in the poem bearing that name, are all buried

We remained in Ediaburgh until this morning, when we took the train for this place, where we are stopping at the King's Arms hotel, and expect to remain over Sabbath. What we shall learn in this, the home of Burns, we shall reserve for our next.

THE HOME OF BURNS. Viewing the Scenes That Inspired the Great Scottsman's Muse,

BELFAST, June 25, 1884. We left Edinburgh for Ayr on Saturday morning, arriving in the afternoon about 3 o'clock, stopping at the King's Arms, which, as hotels go in this country, is a very good and well kept house. Here we spent a very quiet Sabbath. After getting dinner on Saturday we started out to look up everything we could in regard to Burns, this being his birth place, and these the scenes which gave rise to many of his poems. These, indeed, are the chief attractions for visitors to Ayr.

The first thing to which your a tention is directed, is the "Tam O'Shanter" tavern, which stands on one of the principal streets; it is the same i ouse, a low two story thatched dwelling, with stone floor below, being still kept as a public house, from which Tam on that eventful night took his memorable ride. To the reader of Burns, it requires a stretch of the imagination to take in the whole scene, when Tam and his bosom cronic, Souder Johnny, sat "boming at the nappy, getting fou' and unco' happy.''

Out the road to Kirk Alloway stands the old thatched roof cottage, which was built by Burns' father, and in which Scotland's great poet was born, in a little recess in the wall where a bed is now standing. In this cottage was laid the scene of "The Cotter's Saturday Night," one of his finest productions. "Alloway" auld haunted kirk " stands a few hundred yards from the banks of the Bonny Doon. It stands in the midst of an old graveyard, in which Burns' father and mother are buried. The "auld brigg," on which, in attempting to cross, poor Maggie lost her "ain gray tail." stands up the stream a considerable distance from the present crossing, where a new one has been erected, the old one being used only by foot passengers. There is a very handsome monument erected to Burns at this place, which is surrounded by grounds meely kept. The "twa briggs," cross the river Ayr, the "auld" one built in the 15th century, still stands, the " new" one long since having given place to a more substantial structure.

Ayr is an old city, both in fine manutacture of carpets, etc.; its population does not exceed 25,000. The militia are holding their muster here, as well as some volunteer cavalry, which gave the town quite a lively appearance, and there was considerable drunkenness noticeable.

We left Ayr on Monday morning, by way of Muirkirk, passing through Lanark, where Owen the socialist, and father of Robert Dale Owen, once owned large manufacturing interests. We reach Glas-gow, visit the old cathedral, a magnificent structure of the 14th century, go aboard the steamer in the evening and are landed here at 5 o'clock in the morning, where we are glad to receive our first letter from meet Johnny Wood I laughed at him. The suit was before a justice of the peace We made out our case, and Wood's client, the plaintiff made out none worth speaking of at all. When Johnny Wood arose to speak he rehearsed the evidence impartially, and then taking up a book, read the law-such law as I had never heard of, but which fitted his case to a nicety. When he got through I said "Mr. Wood, will you allow me to see that statute, please?" " 'Certainly sir,' he replied handing me the book closed. "'Ab, thank you; but what page is it

"What page?" he cried, indignant. Don't expect me to coach you, young man. Find your own law, -you. I found

"Of course I couldn't find it, but Johnny had the laugh and the court with him, and I lost my case, according to law which that scoundrel Wood had made up out of his head just as he spun it out."
