PARKER'S TONIC.

CLIMBING THE SPIRAL STAIRS.

Invisible Architecture in a New England Parsonage.

"Yes," she said, "our children are married and gone, and my husband and I sit by our winter fire much as we did before the little ones came to widen the circle. Life is something like a spiral staircase; we are always coming around over the spot we started from, only one degree further up the stairs.'

"That is a pretty illustration," remarked her friend musingly, gazing into the glowing coals which radiated a pleasant heat from the many-windowed stove. "You know we cannot stop toiling up the hill, though."

"Surely we cannot, and for myself I don't find fault with that necessity provided the advance in life is not attended with calamity or suffering, for I have had my share of that. Not long since my health utterly broke down. My system was full of malaria. My digestion became thoroughly disordered and my nerves were in a wretched state. I was languid, ate little and that without enjoying it, and had no strength or ambition to perform even my light household duties. Medical treatment failed to reach the seat of the trouble. The disease--which seemed to be weakness of all the vital organs--progressed until I had several attacks, which my physicians pronounced to be acute congestion of the stomach. The last of these was a desperate struggle and I was given up to die. As the crisis had partially passed, my husband heard of the merits of PARKER'S TONIC as an invigorant in just such cases as mine. I took it and felt its good effect at once. It appeared to pervade my body, as though the blessing of new life had come to me. Taking no other medicine I continued to improve and am now in better health than I have been for a long time."

THE BELFAST COUNCIL.

PRESBYTERIANS AND SCOTCH IRISH.

A Fitting Place for the Deliberations of a Great Council--The Strength of American Presbyterian Churches.

Philadelphia American.

The great assembly of representatives of the Presbyterian churches of all lands, meets this year very appropriately at Belfast. The previous meetings at Edinburgh and in Philadelphia were held at great centres of Presbyterian influence; and unless Geneva or Glasgow had been selected for the present year, no city could have been designated that was so well fitted to rank as third after those two. A hundred years ago and less Belfast was just as devoted to the Presbyterian church as it now is. But its political character was different. It was called "Rebelly Belfast" in those days by the friends of the British connection in Dublin and throughout Ulster. It was its Presbyterians who organized the association of the United Irishmen, for the co-operation of Irishmen of all religious beliefs in the establishment of a democratic republic in Ireland. Sorely did they suffer for that audacity. More than one of their ministers expiated their resistance to alien rule on the scaffold. Others fled from the country to find fields of usefulness in America, where more than one institution of learning benefited by this expatriation of the most generous and enlightened of the people of Ulster.

Thanks to the efforts of the late Dr. Henry Cooke, the political atmosphere of Belfast has changed decidedly since "the '98." Himself a Tory of the Tories, and the most trusted leader the Ulster Presbyterians ever had, he preached submission to British rule in all its features,—including the act of Union, the Episcopal establishment and the confiscation of tenant right by the landlords,—as a Christian duty. He patched up the Protestant peace between the two great Protestant bodies, and discouraged controversy between them. In a word, he made Irish Presbyterianism another link to bind the country to Great Britain, and reversed the political traditions of the Scotch colony in Ulster, carrying its members out of all sympathy with the political aspirations of their Catholic countrymen. A few Presbyterians still cling to the old tradition, and are as Irish in feeling as their fathers were in 1798. But the great majority—so powerful was this man's influence—are not widely different from their Episcopalian and Orange countrymen, who refuse them the name Protestant.

The political situation in Ireland will be referred to in the Pan-Presbyterian convention, only to ascribe the greater prosperity and loyalty of Ulster to the diffusion of Protestant and Presbyterian principles. How was it that those principles did not avail to make the Presbyterians of '98 a whit more loyal than were their Catholic countrymen? How was it that the wretchedness of Presbyterian Ulster, when it was more Presbyterian than it now is, drove the majority of its Scotch colonists across the ocean in 1720—1770, to find a home in our Allegheny region? At this day the descendants of that colony in America far outnumber those who still remain in Ireland. They constitute the strength of the Presbyterian churches in America, and enter largely into the composition of the Episcopalian, Methodist, Baptist, Disciples and other churches. They far exceed in wealth and in public importance and influence, and in general intelligence their brethren in Ulster. They fled from Ireland to escape to impoverishing and desolating alien rule, which their Irish brethren almost think it a point of Presbyterian orthodoxy to cherish and support.

It is proposed to hold at Belfast during the sessions of the convention, a reunion of the Scotch-Irish as such, as represented not only by the Irish and American delegates, but by other representatives of the stock. Such a gathering would be interesting and suggestive, if it could be made broad enough to be really representative. A merely Presbyterian gathering it should not be. Episcopalians, like Bishops McIlvaine and Hopkins, Methodists like Bishop Simpson, "Disciples" like Alexander Campbell, Unitarians like William Hazlitt, worldlings like Edgar Allan Poe and Henry James, constitute as much the glory of the stock as do the strictest followers of John Knox and John Calvin. It is a stock with great merits and great defects. Its representatives are men upon whom a nation may learn in the hour of peril, but whom it rarely can trust to lead it in the hour of quiet. The Lawrences, the Jacksons, the Calhouns, were men of storm and conflict—greatest when they had something to fight; often weak to obstinacy in waging small warfare, when they had no enemy worthy of their steel. In the history of our own country it has played a part second to none. The Puritan, the Cavalier and the Quaker stocks have attracted the attention of poets and historians by the more obviously picturesque elements in their character and their history. But none of these is so large numerically in the make up of the nation as the Scotch-Irish are; and we venture to assert that none of them has done so much to shape the policy of the country as they. In this respect the history of America has to be rewritten, and it is a fortunate circumstance that its latest and most brilliant historian bears a name which leaves no doubt of his Ulster derivation.

THREE MEN HANGED.

Paying the Penalty of Their Crimes on the Same Scaffold.

Three United States prisoners were hanged at Fort Smith, Arkansas, on Friday morning for murders committed in the Indian territory, viz: Thomas L. Thompson, a white man; John Daves, a full blooded Choctaw Indian, and Jack Womankiller, alias Gelcatcher, a full-blood Cherokee. The drop fell at twelve o'clock. All died without a struggle. Thompson was indicted for the murder of his partner, James O'Halleran, in Chickasaw nation, last September; Daves, for the murder of William Bullock, a white man, travelling through the Choctaw nation, in May, 1883. He waylaid Bullock in the woods, shot and robbed him. Womankiller, while drunk, found an old white man asleep in the woods and murdered him without provocation and then robbed him. All three admitted the killing. The Indians gave no reason for their crimes, but Thompson claimed to have killed his partner in self-defense.

Three other prisoners were to have been executed to-day but the president pardoned one and commuted the sentence of the other two to imprisonment for life.
