An Attempted Robbery Averted—Religious Items—Personal Paragraphs—Borough Notes of Recent Occurrence.

As Mr. E. E. Carter was going home late last night, he saw two men attempting to enter the grocery store of Casper Michael, at the corner of Fifth and Walnut streets. Upon seeing him they ran, one towards Chestnut street, the other toward Second. About two a. m., Mr. Carter had to return to his shop, being busy, and in passing the store again saw the would-be robbers, who again took to their heels. Mr. Michael was then aroused and kept watch until morning, but the robbers did not make a third visit. Their identity is not known.

A Surprise That Involved Early Rising. New Holland Clarion.

Last Saturday evening Samuel Fasnact, living north of town, finished hauling in his grain all but his rakings, and on Monday the threshers whom he had previously engaged were coming. Mr. F. was, therefore, in a quandary as to how he would rake upward of thirty acres and haul it in in time for the threshers. His brother Christian knowing of his dilemma, concluded to surprise him, and he therefore arose at twelve o'clock on Sunday night, awoke Mart Snader and Lem Swelgart, near neighbors. They then proceeded to the home of Wm. McCarty, called him up and told him of their plans, and they each having a rake proceeding to the field of Samuel, and by four o'clock in the morning they had the field finished. Such surprises are certainly very pleasant.

BIG FIRE IN A MINING VILLAGE.

Belknap, the Entrepot to the Coeur D'Alene Mine, Nearly Destroyed—Decision in a Famous Will Contest.

HELENA, Mont., July 19.—A fire started last night, at Belknap, the entrepot to Coeur D'Alene mines. Owing to the high winds and the entire absence of a fire department, the flames swept rapidly from house to house, and the wildest confusion ensued. Only five houses and the depot remains of what was two months ago a town of 2,000 people. The loss is over $100,000. A large number of people are almost destitute.

Decision Reached in a Will Contest.

NEW YORK, July 19.—Surrogate Rollins rendered a decision to-day in the contest over the will of the late James Tilby, the Washington market butcher, who left all his property valued at $300,000, to his second wife, Sara C. W. Tilby. The will was contested by two sons of the decedent's first wife on the ground that it was irregularly executed; that it was obtained by undue influence; and that she was never the wife of the decedent, but had another husband living at the time she claimed to have married Tilby. The surrogate holds that the will was the product of undue influence and was obtained by fraud and deception, and he therefore denied its admission to probate.

THE STORY OF NAI KAUN.

A Young Siamese Nobleman who Escaped the Hands of a Tyrant.

Nai Kaun, the young Siamese nobleman who has been afraid to go home for four years past, because he was in danger of being beheaded, is now passing his summer vacation at the home of the Rev. Dr. Samuel House, in Waterford. He was recently graduated with high honors at the Williston seminary, East Hampton, Massachusetts. Just before the Siamese embassy sailed for home from New York on July 5, Dr. House went to the metropolis, where he saw the brother of the king of Siam, who was at the head of the embassy, and received assurance from the prince that Nai Kaun would now be safe in returning to his native land. The former regent of the kindom, the implacable enemy of Nai Kaun's family recently died, and the present king is liberal in his views, and inclined to foster education and the sciences. It is hinted that Nai Kaun will take a course in engineering at the Rensselaer Polytechnic institute, and then return to Siam, where he will superintend the opening of a system of railroads and thus restore the fortunes of his once brilliant family.

The story of Nai Kaun is like a page from an Oriental romance. His father, a member of the king's private council, fell in love with a daughter of the English consul four years ago, and ran away with her in a steam yacht. For this he was arrested and first flogged by order of his implacable enemy, the regent, who was the prime minister at the time. The English consul thought the punishment had gone far enough and threatened Bang Kok with a gunboat from Singapore. A Siamese envoy was sent to England to protest against the threat of the consul. He was gone eight months and in the meantime the imprisoned nobleman was beheaded and every member of his family who could be reached either suffered the same fate, or was imprisoned. The property of all his relatives was confiscated, and his chief wife, the mother of Nai Kaun, was put to work in a rice factory. Now, in consequence of royal favor, she enjoys an honorable position as an attendant upon the queen. Nai Kaun, at the time, was studying in the United States, but the prime minister made an effort to compel the American government to give up the boy, so that he could do with him as he chose. Nai Kaun's grandfather became insane on account of the brutal treatment that he received. The English consul was recalled by his government, and was knighted in order to heal his wounded feelings. His daughter made a narrow escape from the country.

The new order of things which prevents Nai Kaun's return home is described as solely owing to the enlightenment of the present king, who, among other changes, has abolished the rule compelling every inferior of whatever rank, when in the presence of a superior, to get down on his hands and knees and crawl.

Bernhardt's Wonderful Bodice.

Olive Logan's London Letter.

All the world and his wife are talking about Sarah Bernhardt's funny costume for Lady Macbeth. Well, well, did you ever? It took Sarah to think of something new, of course. Imagine a jersey—a sort of abdominal jersey, if I may be allowed the expression—an eel-skin garment reaching from the neck to—why to the voluminously plaited skirt, of course, only the skirt begins about a foot and a half lower than skirts usually begin, and all the upper part is unmitigated, unwrinkled jersey. The result proves that Sarah—unless she has resorted to the extreme measure of padding—is not such a fleshless creature as has been supposed. The jersey is embroidered with heraldic figures and the whole effect is marvellously odd. If anything would give her Lady Macbeth a stamp it would be that wonderful skin fitting bodice. In other ways Sarah shows her eccentricity. Where on earth do you suppose she is living during her London engagement? Why at the Star and Garter at Richmond, if you please. She has got a suite of rooms at the famed hostelry of Richmond hill, her windows commanding that peerless prospect which has formed the theme of rapture for so many poetic pens. Every day when the renowned tragic artist sits upon the noble terrace at the Star and Garter she looks upon the scene of which Thomson wrote:

O vale of bliss! O softly swelling hills!
Heavens, what a goodly prospect spreads around,
Of hills and dales and woods and lawns and spires
And glittering towns and gilded streams.

It must be really delightful to enjoy this beautiful panorama at breakfast, dinner and tea, but fancy the price the divine Sarah pays for it! I do not mean the price in pounds, shilling and pence, though doubtless that is not a bagatelle, but in exertion. She drives into town—about ten miles—every afternoon and out again after the performance at night. Physically, the seemingly frail creature must really be very strong.

The following telegram from Commander Schley was received at the navy department Friday afternoon. It is dated St. Johns, N. F., May 18:

Iron caskets for the dead will be delivered July 25. As soon as remains are transferred to them I will sail for New York, advising you when ready. Loch Garry sustained some slight injuries to hull forward. I have directed a board of three officers to report their extent, when you will be advised. Under the charter I hold no injuries are to be made good, the assumption of risk of search covering all else. The week of rest for officers and men after the incessant labor and peril of the past sixty days is most grateful to them. Your telegram and that of the acting secretary, Admiral Nichols, gave us great satisfaction. Please accept our thanks for them. In respect to memory of dead on board flags of ships will fly at half mast during my stay.

Rear Admiral Nichols, acting secretary of the navy, and General Hazen, chief signal officer, had a conference to-day, at which it was concluded to suggest to Commander Schley that he bring the survivors of the Greely party from St. Johns to Portland, where they can remain until better prepared to stand the change of climate. Their families can join them at Portland if so desired. The vessels of the expedition will remain at St. Johns for several days.
