DEAD IN A BAGNIO.

SATURDAY TRAGEDY IN BALTIMORE.
Two Noted Men Shot Down in a House of Ill-Fame in the Monumental City.

A banquet was held at the residence of Jessie Hutchins, No. 104 North street, Baltimore, at 8 a. m. Saturday, from which two fashionably dressed gentlemen and two equally fashionably dressed women departed. After some parleying at the door they were admitted. One of the later one of the women, known as Frankie Robinson, was lying dead in the second story back room, having been shot by one of the men, George W. Hazeltine. In the second story front room the other woman, May Whitson, lies at the point of death from the effects of wounds inflicted by bullets which also came from Hazeltine's pistol. The latter and the other man, Edward Van Witzon, are now under arrest.

The houses of the largest and most fashionable resorts in the city. It is four stories high and furnished with palatial elegance throughout. Jessie Hutchins, who went to Long Branch two weeks ago, had been in charge of the women known as Pearl Snow, whose testimony throws some light upon the remarkable mystery surrounding the tragedy. According to her story she recognized the dead man on her arrival as an old acquaintance and took both of the parties by the hand. After chatting for some time Hazeltine and Van Witzon left them while all the women sat down to breakfast.

After breakfast the party of four newcomers, together with Pearl Snow, Mary Sinclair and one or two other inmates sat down in the back parlor. Hazeltine, who occupied a sofa with Mary White the elder of the two visiting women, after some talk with the two women, and then he was going to about some one. He pointed one weapon at Pearl Snow, who was standing in the door way, and she ran. At that moment the woman White seized both weapons and fired them against the door. Hazeltine did not appear to be in earnest at the time, but the woman took the weapon away and drew the cartridges. After some further talk quiet was restored.

Van Witzon, who was partially intoxicated, then asked to be given a second cup of wine up stairs to sleep. The rest of the party found their way to the second story front room, the scene of the ensuing tragedy. This apartment, which is one of the suites occupied by Jessie Hutchins, was a small room, and was furnished with a bed, a table and a chair. After they had all been seated there some time the woman laid Hazeltine's two empty pistols on the washstand, after reproaching him for trying to frighten women. Hazeltine then said he had business with two women, and asked the others to leave. Closing the door and locking it he renewed a dispute which he had previously had about a diamond ring. He claimed that the woman White had taken the ring from him, and she would not admit it. When she persisted in refusing to give him the ring he managed to take the two pistols from the washstand unperceived. Putting them in his pocket he said out of the room and he and his attendant went down stairs and secured the cartridges previously removed by the woman, reloaded his weapons. Then he returned to the room, closed and locked the door and made another demand for his ring. Being refused he immediately fired four shots in rapid succession.

"I was in the adjoining room," said Emma Woodruff, one of the inmates to a reporter, "and hearing the shots ran to the door. I tried to get in to help, but he refused and then I burst it open. As I did so Frankie Robinson ran by me, threw herself on the bed in the back room from which I had just come, and exclaimed: 'I am dying.' She fell on her back, arms outstretched and never moved again."

Owing to the confusion and excitement which followed the shooting the inmates of the house could not give a clear statement of the events. Officer Mills, who was on the corner of Bath and North streets, a short distance away, heard the shots and, entering through the basement, ran up stairs. When he entered the front room the other woman was tussling in the middle of the floor with Hazeltine. He saw a pistol in each hand and the woman was holding her arms, pointing the weapons towards the floor. The officer immediately rushed to her aid and grasped Hazeltine in the same way. The murderer was forced towards the bed and then he demanded that the woman give him the ring. Being refused he ordered her to drop the weapons. Hazeltine complied and the officer immediately secured them and put them in his pocket. He then asked Hazeltine why he had shot the woman and the latter replied:

"I am very sorry. I would have given anything in the world if it had not happened."

When another officer arrived Mills went into the back room where the woman Robinson lay, but as he crossed the threshold she gave a little gasp and expired. By this time the house was full of policemen, who went for Dr. Alexander Hill.

The woman White, as soon as Hazeltine was disarmed, dropped on the bed and was found by the officer dead. She had a bullet wound near the mouth and passed out on the opposite side of the face. Another had entered the arm. The wound in the face was pronounced serious by Dr. Hill and at the request of the woman, a messenger was sent to the Rev. Dr. R. H. Payne, of Mt. Calvary Protestant Episcopal church, who came at once to the woman's bedside. The room was cleared of all save the wounded woman and the clergyman and what statements she made are unknown. It is understood that she confided to Dr. Payne her real name, residence and other facts about her career. After praying earnestly with her she departed.

Meanwhile Hazeltine and Van Witzon had been sent to the station house. It was found by Dr. Hill that the woman Robinson had been shot through the lungs and also through the thigh. The first shot proved fatal. Her right arm is missing from the elbow to the hand. The daughter of a wealthy estate dealer named Jackson, living at City Island, New York. Hazeltine lives at Jamestown, N. Y. Van Witzon is a Baltimore lawyer. They joined the two women at Toronto and brought them here.

DISGRACE AFTER DEATH.

A scandalous disclosure was made at the inquest over Judge Watkins Williams, who died suddenly on Thursday night, at Nottingham, England. Judge Williams was a leading member of the English bench and ranked deservedly high among lawyers on account of his learning and ability. He was the head of a large family, and was respected in society, and especially popular among English reformers. He was a frequent orator at meetings in the interest of social reforms, and was generally looked upon as a pattern of all the virtues.

Judge Williams was at Nottingham in the performance of his regular duties on his judicial circuit. He was in the apparent enjoyment of excellent health during the day, and died suddenly during Thursday night, as was given out, from an sudden attack of heart disease. At the inquest, however, the coroner brought out the fact that Judge Williams' death occurred in a Nottingham house of ill repute. After transacting the day's business on the bench, Judge Williams returned to the hotel, and there dined with one of his intimates. After dinner the judge and his companion spent the night together in an orgie, in the course of which he suddenly expired in the hotel.

The coroner made every attempt to hush up these disclosures, and the friends of the family vainly attempted to bribe the intimates of the house and the reporters to conceal the scandal.

An Anecdote of Lieutenant Greely.
Lieutenant Greely's inborn pluck is illustrated in the following anecdote related by a comrade of the army: "When a little boy, not more than ten years old, visited an uncle on his farm near Vermont. One day the uncle had occasion to use the grindstone, which may be found in every New England door yard, and joyously offered the boy five cents if he would turn the handle for two hours. The boy was accepted, and the little fellow began to turn. In less than half an hour the perspiration poured from him in streams. Fifteen minutes more elapsed and the tears began to mingle with the 'sweat of his brow,' but he still turned away manfully. The uncle told him to stop, that he had turned enough and could have the five cents without more work. But the boy declined to stop and worked away, although crying with pain. He kept on for the grindstone and the two hours elapsed and was laid up for some days afterwards."

Sheridan, Vice President Edmunds, Speaker Carlisle, many of the senators and a large number of congressmen. New she proposed to sell the autographs which accompany the contributions, and will take there by to more than duplicate the sum she received.
