FATIGUE OF THE EYE. Some Fallacies Concerning Relative to Human Vision.

In a recent lecture Professor W. B. Frost observed that persons speak of their eyes being fatigued, meaning thereby that the seeing portion of the brain is fatigued, but in that they are mistaken. So men say their brains are tired. Brains seldom become tired. The retina of the eye, which is a part of the brain and an offset from it, hardly ever is tired. The fatigue is in the inner and outer muscles attached to the eye and in the muscle of accommodation. The eye ball, resting in a bed of fat, has attached to it six muscles for turning it in any desired direction, and the muscle attached to the side nearest the nose and one at the outer angle of the eye should, in every normal eye, be balanced. They are used in converging the eye on the object to be viewed, and the inner muscles are used the more when the object is the nearer. The muscle of accommodation is one which surrounds the lens of the eye. When it is wanted to gaze at objects near at hand this muscle relaxes and allows the lens to thicken, increasing its refractive power at the same time that the muscles on the inner or nasal side of the eye contract and direct the eye to the point gazed at. It is in these muscles that the fatigue is felt, and one finds relief in closing the eyes or gazing at objects at a distance. The chief source of fatigue is the lack of balance in the two sets of inner and outer muscles of accommodation. It may be set down that there is something wrong when the eye becomes fatigued. The defective eye, as it gives but sooner, is really safer from severe strains. The usual indication of strain is a redness of the rim of the eyelid, betokening a congested state of the inner surface, accompanied with some degree of itching. When it is so that the eye is not equal to the work required of it, the proper remedy is not rest, for that is fatal to strength, but the use of glasses of sufficient power to render unnecessary so much effort in accommodating the eye to vision. It is not good sense to waste time in resting the eye, and that practice does not strengthen it. Eyes begin to age at about the tenth or twelfth year of life, when they have reached their full development. At the age of forty-five or fifty years the lenses cease to thicken, when the pressure is removed and their prosopopia, or old sight, begins. When a child is compelled to use or require the use of glasses there is little reason to hope that it will outgrow the need, but the person will use these glasses as a basis, adding other glasses as he reaches the age when old sight begins, or using thicker glasses. Dr. Seeley, however, mentioned one case he had observed where a child had outgrown the need of glasses, as a change from the use of glasses to a small and puny child to a large and well developed man. Second sight, or the apparent recovery of strength of vision, which is sometimes seen in the aged, is due to the fact that the eyeball by its elongation, in the shape of the lens caused by the person becoming near sighted, accompanied by a change in the lens caused by the appearance of cataract.

LET THESE THINGS BE CONSIDERED. Thousands of men die every day who could be saved. Freedom is usually to blame for their illness of life. It were believed that the sum of disease may certainly be reduced by physics, much would be gained. And yet the proposition is very simple and can be carried out daily more impurities than is daily generated. You will soon be rid of impurities. The effect of this new practice is seen in Biliousness, Liver, and Kidney troubles. But it is of equal value in head and brain affections, in Pleurisy, Pneumonia, Apoplexy, and Paralysis.
