VIVARIO'S ROMANCE.
A GOOD STORY OF VILLAGE LOVE.
How a father's Obstinacy was overcome by a Simple Shepherd Couple—Fiction Skipped by Fact.
Vivario Cor., Paris Morning News.

I am writing you in the midst of a forest—beside the good old village of Viorville, surrounded by honest folk, who think more of their work than of politics. The latest newspaper that I have read is seven or eight days old, the most interesting news travels slowly to this beautiful spot. The habits, who are too busy to gossip, have a horror of chit-chat and are scarcely more talkative than the tall pines and myrtle bushes. So I will tell you a village story, and I am going to relate it just as it was told to myself scarcely an hour ago.

As you may well imagine, a young girl and a youth are concerned in the story, and consequently love is the theme. The youth, a little shepherd of the forests of Viorville, loved a young girl of the village, who maintained village where the fashionable ladies of Ajaello go to spend the summer. The young girl also loved the youth. They had told each other so, and had pledged themselves to one another, and I think from that time they kept their promise, for never in the memory of shepherds were the flocks of Viorville so often seen grazing on the pastures of Santo-Pietro. But the end of all this, the upshot of all these promences, was certainly not what you would expect at least, as though since Romeo and Juliet the course of true love had always run smooth.

At the first word of marriage the father of the young girl, the fat old Capone, set down into a terrible passion and terrible that for several days after the flocks of Viorville did not dare to wander near the hillside of Santo-Pietro. But on the fifth day the young girl, who knew her classical, told him, and then was repeated the story in the "Intelligencer"—the cruel father at the bedside of his dying daughter, and far out in the country the plaintive notes of the shepherd's reed pipe. At last the father relents.

"I will see about that," he said, "after he has drawn his conscription number and has served his time. I do not want you to have a husband who will be compelled to leave you as soon as you are married."

How came it that in this country, where there is no telegraph, the shepherd an hour afterward knew what had been said? The fact is that on entering the village he had only one idea uppermost in his head—escape from his term of military service. The shepherd of Viorville was not lacking in resources, and on a question was by no means stupid. The next day, while cutting wood in the forests, he, as if by accident, gave his right hand a smart blow with his hatchet and severed his little right index finger. He immediately took place! He went home and tended his hurt as well as he was able; and when the wound was healed and he had been rightly and duly exempted to visit to Santo-Pietro and bravely repeated his offer.

"I am not going to serve in the army," he said, "for I am sure they will never take me. You can marry my now."

But the father stopped him by a word. "Never," he cried, "will I give my daughter to one who is maimed."

And it was apparent by his tone of voice that he meant what he had said. In spite of his daughter's illness he remained inexorable. It was clear that this old man did not like a maimed son-in-law. He made but one reply to the prayers and tears of this young girl.

"Never, you thoroughly understand, never! Now let me let him come hanging round any more. Cripples ought to marry cripples. Let him marry the little blind girl of Viorville, or the hunchback of Santo-Pietro."

The young girl did not reply, and not once during the illness did she speak of her shepherd. When she was convalescent she was seized with a longing for the forest and the open air, and every day took long walks by the hillside of Viorville by the road that her father knew so well. Now he had his finger again came across the little shepherd, pale and haggard, like a shepherd of the forest of Viorville.

SUICIDES IN THREE MONTHS.
Over Four Hundred in the United States During March, April and May.
The Insurance Chronicle, which makes a specialty of compiling statistics of suicides in the United States, publishes a table showing the number of suicides during March, April and May. The whole number reported for this period was 423, of which 160 occurred in March, 125 in April and 138 in May. This is a slight increase over the same months last year.

The record, according to condition, was as follows: Males, 22; bachelors, 123; husbands, 108; wives, 29; widows, 9; widowers, 17; divorced men, 1; divorced women, 4. Shooting was the method chosen by 165, poisoning by 95, hanging by 75, cut by 27 and drowning by 18. In point of nationality the Americans led with 221, the Germans following with 91 and the English with 19. The remainder were scattered among 17 other nationalities. There were 46 farmers, 29 merchants, 21 day laborers, 11 clerks and 9 speculators in the list. The remainder were scattered among 69 other occupations. The usual proportion of male to female suicides among men to one among women was repeated. The record as to sex was males, 224; females, 99. Ohio led in the roll of states with 44; Pennsylvania followed with 42; Illinois with 38; New York with 37 and Missouri with 27. Two hundred and eighty suicides were committed by daylight and 143 at night. In 19 cases the crime of suicide was connected with that of murder.

The Bazaar Dance.
Macon Telegraph.
We were on the Huguenot plantation in Sumner county, a modest farm of 8,000 acres. The manager walked the end of the veranda and a whoop. An answering shout was heard, and in a few minutes a long line of dusky forms came stealing through the shadows of the pines and ranged themselves in front of where we sat. The bazaar and the musicians commenced to play. Suddenly into the center of the open ring leaped the sable dancer who was to personate the buxard. Though dancing in perfect time to the waltz, musical accompaniment, he yet managed to imitate with his various antics every movement of the mouth which he had chosen for his model. His tottering, tipping gait was faithfully delineated, as were also his sudden springs and right to left, his timid approach, his ravenous peck and sudden retreat from the craved but dreaded carcass, which, in his homely drama, was represented by a hat that looked indeed as if the buxard had been after it.

Once upon a time, began the teacher, "two brothers started to Sunday school on Sabbath morning. Their way led by a fine peach orchard, where the trees were hanging over with ripe, luscious peaches. One of the brothers proposed going into the orchard and getting some of the fruit, but the other refused and sped away, leaving his companion greedily devouring the peaches. Now it happened that the owner of the orchard saw them, and the next day he called the boy who refused to steal his peaches, by giving him fifty cents. He got a prize for his honesty, and what do you suppose the other boy got for his dishonesty?"

"He got the peaches!" yelled every member of the class, and another penitentiary story was ended.

Carlyle on Critics.
One evening Carlyle was discussing in a small but miscellaneous crowd about books, most likely his own, when a young Oxford man, a tall fellow, in a blue coat, with a long nose, who looked like a student of the law, but who did not think much of works that expressed the author's opinions and theories only, and he was particularly down on the theory business. Whereupon Carlyle said: "Young sir, once upon a time there was a man in France whose name was Rousseau, and he wrote a book which was filled with theories and opinions and so on. And the young nobility and fops of the period said the book was worth, but, young sir, it is an incident of history that their slight went to bind the second edition of that book!"

Little on Chances.
"My dear," said the czar to his wife, the czarina, "has the milkman left the milk yet?"

Well, will you think a little to see if it's poison?"

Fat and Lean Feet.
Set up in bed and cough till the clothing was wet with perspiration. My wife hustled that she had a pair of shoes made for me, and two bottles have come in. I can honestly recommend it."

Home Sweet Home.
This song is very good in its way, but is there any slowness in the household? If so, some chance the way by using the following. A Remarkable Escape.
Mr. Mary A. Bailey, of Frankstown, Pa., was afflicted for six years with Asthma and Bronchitis, during which time the best physicians failed to relieve her. Her life was spared, until in last October she procured a Bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery, when immediate relief was felt, and by continuing its use for a short time she was completely cured, gaining in health and vigor. For sale by H. B. Cochran, druggist, 127 and 129 North Queen street, Lancaster, Pa. Large bottles $1.00. (4)
