NUREMBURG'S MARKET.

GERMAN PARMERS AND MARKETERS.

A Journey By Kail Through the Fields of the Fatherland -- Scenes to Old Naremburg -Qualot Sights Observed.

Extracts from Private Correspondence. MUNICIT, July 29, 1884.—We left Cologne for Bonn on Wednesday afternoon by rail, distance about 20 miles, in order to take the morning boat up the Rhine to Mayence, as it is at this point where the fine scenery commences. There is nothing of special interest at Bonn except its university, and I spent the afternoon in writing under the cooling shade of the horse chestnuts in the park of the Grand Hotel Royal on the bank of the river, where boats are constantly passing up and down. In front, on the east bank, is stretched out a lovely plain, with a teeming population; women washing, and spreading the clothes to dry on the green sword on the river bank; while looking up the stream the tall eliff of the Drachenfels, with its ruined castle, looms up over a thousand feet. The next morning we take the boat from Cologne, which stops to take on pas-sengers from Bonn. The passenger list to mar the pleasures of the day was a severe thunder storm in the afternoon, which drove all hands below, but the sun soon shone out again and all were happy At first sight the Rhine does not impress one like the Hudson; it is not so large and then it has a muddy appearance. The scenery is as fine along the Hudson, but different type. It is the history of a thousand years, of which poets and historians of all nations have written, and the ruins of the old castles standing sentinels on her tall cliffs, each has has its

Roman Remains. The sites of many of its towns were known to and occupied by the Romans, and much of their work remains. Then the quaintness of these towns, their old and historic churches, high gables and red tile roofed dwellings; the immense fortiherited impurities and expelling the germs of fications at Coblentz and Ebranbreitstein; the vine clad hills, terraced in many places to the top, the earth carried up by peasants in baskets on their backs and heads—all there go to make up a picture rarely met with in any country, and I ask myself the question: "What picture will the Hudson present a thousand years hence?"

Pair Bluger . It is evening when we rough "Fair burg Biogen on the Rhine," made famous by Mrs. Norten's beautiful poem. Here the scenery changes; the hills no longer rise in such stately grandeur, but gradually recede from the river, and the gentle slope is covered with beautifully laid out gardens and tasteful dwellings. Bingen is a COMPLETE TREATMENT WITH INHALER pretty place, situated on a gentle slope at the confluence of the Nahe with the Rhine. Just opposite, on the southern point of the Neslerwald, stands the heroic statue of "Germany Keeping Watch on the Rhine," recently erected by the impresial government as a monument of the one sores. T thousand years existence of the German p. m., and take quarters at the Hotel de Holland.

An Old German City.

We take a carriage in the morning an l drive to all the places of interest. It is an old German city in Hesse of about 60,000 inhabitants, situated at the confluence of the Main with the Rhine. It is famous for its immense fortifications: the foundation of the city dates B. C. 14, when Drusus built extensive fortifications here, the remains of which are still here, and also of a Roman acqueduct. It has a cathedral and several old churches, with monuments to Schiller and Gatenberg; the latter was born and is buried here; I saw the house he was born in and the shop where he set up his first printing press. We start for Nuremburg, distant a 12hours journey by rall, and reach it at 7 p. m , passing through a variety of scenery, towns level and highly cultivated, large districts of which are devoted to the cold vation of hops. German Farming. THE GREAT INDIAN MEDIOINE. is highly picturesque, with its green meadows, irrigated as they are still in some parts of our county from the little streams which meander through them; with mountains towering on either side with a thick growth of green pine; and, when the hills grow smaller, covered with grape vines; a public road, smooth as a floor, runs for miles close to and parallel with the railroad, skirted on either side with apple trees, laden with fruit, many of them already propped. We pass through a number of towns, the largest of which is Wartzburg, on the slope of the hill on which the Castle of Marianburg stands; and on the Steinburg opposite, are the vineyards that turnsh the wines for which Wurtzburg is famous. The people generally live in villages, all of which present the same appearance, of steep roofed and red tiled cottages and out buildings. They farm the land around these villages, going out very early in the morning and working until 7 and 8 o'el-ek the evening.

Their farming operations are conducted Norbeck & Miley in the evening. in the most primitive style, the plowing, grain hauling, &c., being done by cows, and occasionally oxen, which are hitched up single and double. They have a wooden curved pin with a pad which is fastened around the head, below the horns; to this are attached rope traces, by which the load is pulled; a chain around the neck of the animal serves the place of our breast chains. It is now the midst of harvest, which is principally out with the sickles and a contrivance with a short seythe, used with one | 30 BUGGIES of all STYLES. hand, while with the other the grain is grasped. We see hundred of women in the fields using the sickle and binding and pitching grain, many without any head tied loosely on their heads, their arms and faces burned as brown as their loaves of brown bread. There are no tences, but the land is farmed generally in small patches, and they progress very slowly with their work.

In Auremburg's Markete. We arrive at Nuremberg, one of the oldest and quaintest towns in Germany, and stop at the "Kothes Ross"-Red Horse. It is now 7 p. m. The next morn-ing it is raining. We hear a wonderful clattering of wagons, and looking out of the window see wagon after wagon, drawn principally by cows, piled up with hampers, baskets and tubs, driven and followed by men and women with wooden-soled shoes, trudging through the rain to the market "platz," to which I soon follow to witness the strange scene, having aleady observed a similar one at Cologue. Lettuce, carrots, coleraba, cauliflower, turnips and potatoes, are the principal vegetables. I saw bushels of the most elegant cherries sold by the pound at 34 cents. The butter is put up in small rolls, half moon shape; not having ce it is soft and light colored; they evidently do nor understand the coloring process as out farmers' wives do.

It is still raining. Standing on the steps of an ancient looking arcade, full of small shops, where all kinds of merchan dise are exposed for sale, I take in the scene. First, I notice that many of the customs of attending market have been caried to our own country, and are practiced in a modified form by our Pennsylvania German population. Women are sitting by their marketing, taking their coffee and cating their bun, on their laps a basket of butter, in front of them one of eggs, others bargaining for vegetables, &s. with their customers; the old woman, who sells horse radish—and by the way the finest I ever saw; the man and his wife with their table on which is piled immense wood en soled shoes, which they are endeavoring to arrange in pairs, but all of which look alike; the baker with his heavy dark looking loaves of black bread-and curiously shaped buns, cakes, &c.; fathers and sons busily engaged in unloading hampers from their strange looking, low-wheeled wagons; women tumbling the oddest shaped wheelbarrows, piled up full of baskets bags, &c; others with huge baskets, with three feet, which they strap on their backs, and carry heavy is largely made up of Americans; the day is an exceptionally fine one, and we make a regular pionic of it. The only incident ducks and the continual gabbling of the ducks and the continual gabbling of the German by men, women and childreneven to the crying of babies in the same language-to one who don't understanda word of it, it is enough to make him daft. Then the surroundings go to com-plete the picture. There are old houses with high gables facing the street; with the oddest shaped bay windows, and it is of a different character. There are little funny looking dormer windows, than the Rhine, and the pen of I wing has years old. Many of them built in the made it classic. But the Rhine is of a 14th century. Right across the way stands an old church with its Heaven pointed spires; it has withstood the storms of centuries; its walls the tooth of time has partly caten away; and its saints adorning niches, have lost much of their former expression by the loss of limbs, noses, etc. Sights About the Town.

The hotel we are stopping at is over 300 years old and in a very good state of preservation, but it presents the most striking contrast with modern built hotels possible to imagine.

We drive around the city and through the gate of the old city wall, near where the castle, now filled with soldiers, looms high above the city, out to St. John's cemetery, where we are shown the graves of Albrecht Durer, the poet painter, who died in 1528, and Hans Sachs, who died in 1585. Both of these men had much to do in preparing the way for the Reformation. It was Longfellow who sang to Nurem

Not thy Kaisers nor thy councils Won for thee the world's regard, But thy painter, Albrecht Durer And Hans Sachs, thy cobbler bant. There are several old churches which date back to the 13th and 14th centuries.

We leave Nuremburg at 4:30 p. m. and arrive at this, one of the largest and finest of German cities, the capitol of Batavia at 9:30 p. m. G. W. H. Gucklen's Arnica Salve.
