VENICE AND FLORENCE DESCRIBED.

Rev. Dr. Apple and Mr. Hessel find an Old acquaintance--Rev. Mr. Hargis's Work for the Methodist Church. Extracts from Private Correspondence.

FLORENCE, ITALY, July 27, 1884.--

Venice, ancient and renowned, is a curious and an American. Once the seat of great power, commanding the commerce of Eastern Europe, and containing a population of 200,000, it has now only 90,000. It is still a place of considerable trade, but rich in monuments of its ancient splendor. Built upon a number of small islands, connected by the only connection with the mainland is the rail road, the station of which fronts on the grand canal. There is not a horse, mule, donkey or ox, nor a single vehicle drawn by one, in the city, all the business and travel being done by means of boats and gondolas, which line the 150 canal streets. These canals spanned by over three hundred bridges, mostly of stone among them the Rialto, the largest, which has two foot-ways across it, and a line of shops or arcades on either side. It was here that Silylock piled his trade of a money-lender in his day, and when being "routed" by Antonio, he conceived his "ancient grudge against him."

We take a gondola at the station, are taken to the Grand Canal, and on the way to the Rialto, which is the principal place, called here "La Piazza," where the bridge is paved with blocks of travertine and marble, about 200 yards in length and an average breadth of 75 yards. Three sides of it are enclosed by imposing structures, which appear to form one vast marble palace, elevated by a flight of steps to the weather, and on the other side by the Church of St. Mark and the Doge's palace. The ground floors of these structures are used as cafes and shops.

The piazza of St. Mark is the grand focus of attraction in Venice. On every evening after sunset it is filled with people, and all who desire fresh air congregate and listen to the live military band which plays here on certain days of the week.

The pigeons.

A large flock of pigeons resort here daily to be fed; they are so tame that they will fly up on your shoulder and eat bread out of your mouth. There is a tradition among the Venetians that in some important naval engagement of one of their admirals, news of great value to him was carried by pigeons, which fact was his story. Since then the descendants of these carrier pigeons have been carefully tended and are highly revered by the citizens. They nestle in the nooks and crannies of the surrounding buildings, and are seen in great numbers in the evening perched on the facade of St. Mark's.

The church of St. Mark's, the tutelary saint of Venice, whose remains are said to have been removed to and buried here in 828, is a Romanesque building of the 10th and 11th centuries. It is decorated with lavish, and almost oriental, magnificence, which it would be impossible to describe in this letter. Externally and internally the church is adorned with five hundred columns of marble. The most remarkable are eight detached columns in the vestibule, four at each of the lateral portals on the west side. The capitals of which are adorned with peacocks and lions.

Over the principal portals are the four horses in gilded bronze, 5 feet in height, which are believed to be of Roman workmanship in the time of Nero; they were carried to Paris by Napoleon in 1797, but were restored to Venice.

The Doge's palace is a magnificent pile, showing evidence, as everything else here does, of decayed grandeur. It contains many historical pictures of great value, by the old masters of the Venetian school.

The celebrated "Bridge of Sighs," by which Ruskin calls "the sentimental tortoise of Byron," connects the palace with the prison across the canal on the east.

We take a gondola ride in the evening through the grand canal and out into the lagoon opposite St. Mark's place and back again through the smaller canals to our hotel, past many old palaces in which the nobility of Venice lived in her palmy days. Many of them are now used for such base purposes as hotels and warehouses and have rather a faded look.

Before leaving on Friday morning we visited the "Ghetto church," situated near the station, erected in 1713. It is entirely lined with marble in the interior, and sumptuously decorated, and although smaller than many, it is the most elegant church I have seen in Europe.

Mr. Hargis and his Work.

We leave Venice at 10 o'clock, and were agreeably surprised to find our conductor, Rev. J. H. Hargis, well known in Lancaster, who now has charge of the mission work of the Methodist Episcopal church in Italy, having his headquarters at Rome. He was in Venice on business connected with his charge. We were fortunate enough to have him accompany us to Florence; his genial manners and rare conversational powers rendered what would otherwise have been a long and tedious ride a very pleasant one to our party.

The first part of our route was through a rich agricultural and fruit growing country, passing through Padua and Bologna, both old and celebrated cities in Italian history. The former lies at the foot of the Apennine mountains. We cross the river Adige and, before reaching Bologna, I noticed large quantities of hemp being grown on the route.

Up the Apennines.

Our ascent of the Apennines begins soon after we leave Bologna, and the country begins to assume a wild and rugged look, much wash and debris having come down from the mountains above. We pass through no less than forty-eight tunnels, from actual count, on this route. Night closes in upon us after crossing the summit, and we cautiously wind our way down the steep grade in the midst of rain, accompanied by thunder and lightning, reaching Florence 19 1/2 hours, where we propose to remain until Monday, when we expect to reach Rome, which will be the turning point on our journey southward.

A Familiar Name.

We stop at the "Grand Hotel New York," which sounds like home at least. It is situated on the Arno, a turbid and muddy stream, which divides the city into two unequal parts. The city is surrounded by high hills, of the Apennine range, on either side, in the delightful valley of the Arno, with elegant suburban villas on the hillside. The houses are principally white, which, with the green foliage of the shade trees, gives the city a delightfully picturesque appearance from the neighboring hills.

An amazing profusion of art treasures, such as no other locality possesses within so narrow limits, reminiscences a history which has influenced Europe, perpetuated by imposing monuments, and lastly the with attractive cities in the world. The attractiveness of Florence.

It is impossible for any one to take in all, or indeed a very small part of its attractions in a brief visit. We visited the Uffizi gallery, with its wealth of paintings and statuary, by the most famous of the "old masters." We took a boat on the river on the top of one of the bridges, into a great palace, beyond through which you wander, and wonder how it was ever possible to get such a collection together. But, has taken hundreds of years and millions of treasure to do so.

In addition to these there are numerous other galleries, palaces, academy of fine arts, archeological museum, national museum, to say nothing of the studios of artists, and galleries of private individuals.

In the Uffizi gallery we noted especially the celebrated original of the "Madonna della Seggiola," by Raphael, which has been copied so extensively over the world.

We drive to the new or American quarter of the city, where many wealthy Americans and English have villas. On a high point overlooking the city is a bronze statue of Michael Angelo of heroic size.

The Walled City of Italy.

The church of St. Croce is the Westminister Abbey of Italy. Here many of her most eminent poets, statesmen and soldiers repose and have monuments; that of Dante being among the most prominent. The Duomo (St. Maria del Fiore), the foundation stone of which was laid in 1295, is not yet completed. It contains statues of St. Matthew, by Donatello; of St. Mark, by Nicola Arentino, and of St. Peter, by Baccio Bandinelli--all of which are very fine works of art. The adornments of this church are very rich, and the dome greatly surpasses that of St. Peter's at Rome in height and circumference. The Campanile, or Bell Tower, is a marvelous piece of work, over 250 feet high (there is no spire) and encased in marble of various colors. There is an elegant park with shady drives, which is reached by driving down the Arno on its right bank. Here I saw many fine turn out, and not several furies in hand, and one with six; all got up in the most elaborate royal style.

A Contrast Noted.

Along side of this I noted the other extreme, of some of the oldest teams of little and poor horses, mules and asses that an American ever sat eye upon. We also saw a good deal of poverty, and streets and by ways. The middle classes dress very well, and are very suave in their manners; and the higher classes dress elegantly, but are not much seen on the streets, except when they drive out in the evenings.

In company with Mr. Hargis, we visited one of their mission Methodist churches here. The services were conducted in Italian, and were not understood by us, yet we were impressed by their good singing, the earnest manner of the pastor, and the appearance and numbers. There are six other Protestant churches in the city.

Hardened Liver.

Five years ago I broke down with kidney and liver complaint and rheumatism. Since then I have been unable to be absent at all. My liver became hard like wood; my limbs were pulled up and filled with water. All the best physicians agreed that nothing could cure me. I resolved to try Hop Bitters; I have used seven bottles; the hardness has all gone from my liver, the swelling from my limbs, and it has worked a miracle in my case; otherwise I should have been in my grave. J. W. MORGAN, Buffalo, Oct. 1, 1881.

Poverty and Suffering.

"I was dragged down with debt, poverty and suffering for years, caused by a sick family and large bills for doctoring. I was completely discouraged, until one year ago, by the advice of my pastor, I commenced using Hop Bitters, and in one month we were all well, and none of us have seen a sick day since, and I was able to go to all poor men, you can keep your families well a year with Hop Bitters for less than one doctor's visit will cost. I know it."--A WORKMAN.

Some persons who are afflicted with green Hops on the white label, shun all the vile, poisonous stuff with "Hop" or "Hops" in their name.

Every reason to be a Real Success

In this time of great apathy; that is, when the people are so ignorant of the value of Hop Bitters, it is our duty to try Hop Bitters; I have used seven bottles; the hardness has all gone from my liver, the swelling from my limbs, and it has worked a miracle in my case; otherwise I should have been in my grave. J. W. MORGAN, Buffalo, Oct. 1, 1881.
