SIGHTS ABOUT ROME.

A VISIT TO THE ETERNAL CITY.

The Pantheon and Colosseum Described by a Lancaster Traveler. - St. Peter's Famous Church and the Vatican.

Extra from Foreign Correspondent.

Rome, Italy, July 31, 1884.—We left Florence on Monday at 12:30 p. m., but in the train being an express, as we were led to suppose, it proved to be one of the slowest of slow trains. After traveling until 5 o'clock the train drew up at a station 100 miles from Rome, and we were informed that this train would not go any further that night. We were accordingly compelled to go to a hotel a mile away and remain until 2 o'clock in the morning, when the express, which was to bring us to Rome at 6 1/2 a. m. It was the first experience we had of the kind and was not very highly relished.

Sights in the Eternal City.

We stop at the Hotel de l'Alliance, which is a well kept Italian hotel; but we do not have time to go to the Colosseum, having left for Naples yesterday. During our stay here we have employed our time in seeing the many objects of interest in this historical city to the best advantage. We have visited the Colosseum, Pantheon, Arch of Titus, Forum Arch of Trajan, Arch of Septimius Severus, Nervus aqueduct, the ruins of the palace of the Caesars, the baths of Caracalla, Arch of Four Fontains, the three fountains built by Pope Benedict, in 1735, Monte Palatine, Monte Caelio, St. Peter's, St. John Lateran and St. Maria Maggiore. We have also rode several miles out the Appian Way, and through other parts of the city; so you will notice we have not been idle during our brief visit.

To examine in detail all the points of interest here would take a year, if not more. Our time being necessarily limited, having striven to get here, we could but take a glance. But with that we feel satisfied, and amply repaid for our coming.

The Pantheon and Colosseum.

The Pantheon, once a heathen temple, and now used as a Christian church, is the best preserved work of old Rome. It was with a feeling of awe that we passed under the massive arches supported by mighty pillars, and through the great doors of entrance, and thought how it had stood for over two thousand years. It contains the tomb of Raphael, the great painter, and of Victor Emmanuel, late king of Italy. The latter is covered with the funeral pall and floral decorations used at the funeral, over which a soldier keeps guard. The Colosseum is much larger and more elaborate than that of London, but not in such a good state of preservation.

A Roman Cemetery.

In going into the Appian Way, we stop to examine the small buildings in which were deposited the ashes of those who were buried in the city. These buildings are about 25 feet square, about 6 feet high, and are above ground, and roofed with tile. The descent is made by stone steps, with iron hand rail. In the sides of the wall are built arched niches, in which sit the small urns containing the ashes of the dead, with the names of the families on the niches—many of Rome's noted citizens among them. All along this old highway are scattered tombs of noted characters, in Roman history; among them that of Scipio Africanus, This old Roman road is the same which St. Paul passed over in his journey to Rome, and passes through Appi Forum, or the place of Three Taverns, mentioned by him.

Viewing Historic Sights.

We did not enter the catacombs, which lay along this road, in which the persecuted Christians were compelled to hide themselves during the third century. To our left stretches out the Campagna, and beyond it are the Sabine, and to the south the Alban hills. On the latter are scattered the ruins of the ancient city of Alba. The Campagna are strewn the broken arches of the aqueduct, which formerly conducted the water to the city from a lake on the top of the mountain. The ruined brick walls of the old city, which is seen out before us. The Appian Way is spread like a silver thread across the distant Alban hills. This is a great resort for the fashionable people of Rome, and it is where the finest view is obtained of the city.

Visiting Famous Churches.

The churches of St. Maria Maggiore and St. John Lateran are among the finest, both of which we visited. They are both richly adorned with paintings in fresco by the old masters. Yesterday morning we visited St. Peter's and the Vatican. Some idea of the extent of the former may be gained when it is learned that it is about 500 feet long by 250 in breadth and 400 feet high from the bottom of the high altar to the top of the dome. Each of the several altars ranged along the sides are as large as an ordinary church. The bronze statue, said to be that of St. Peter, which stands in this church, the toes of the right foot of which are much worn by the kissing of pious pilgrims, impressed me more as that of Jupiter, than of our pre-conceived ideas of St. Peter. Our guide darkly hinted that such was the fact, but we hope not.

At the Vatican.

At the entrance to the Vatican, we pass the picturesquely dressed Swiss guard to the pope. We pass up the long line of steps, and go through the numerous galleries of frescoes and other paintings by the old masters, to whom Roman history is so much more profitable to be seen by sufficient judges to pronounce on these works of art, but many of them are so natural and expressive that they appear to stand out from the canvases.

We now drive about a mile to the statue galleries in another part of the Vatican, where we view long lines of heathen and Christian statues. This morning we visited the Capitoline, those the statue of the "Dying Gladiator," which recall the exquisite lines of Byron in his Childe Harold's Pilgrimage. In the Vatican, in a niche, to see the statue of Moses, by Michael Angelo, which is the finest conception of the great law giver of Israel in the world. We should like to say more of Rome, but time forbids, as we leave at 2:45 for Pisa.

TRAVELLING THROUGH ITALY.

American and Italian Live Stock compared.—The, Genoa and Milan.

LAKE COMO, Italy, Aug. 4, 1884.—We left Rome on Thursday last at 2:35 p. m. for Pisa. We closed our letter from Rome rather hastily for want of proper time, having said nothing of the face of the country from Florence to that city, which was a surprise to us. The first 100 miles is little more than a dreary waste of hills and mountains, with scarcely a vestige of vegetation and very sparsely inhabited, except here and there scattered patches of cultivation, and houses and out-buildings on hill tops. But there is an improvement after this, and the land appears of a better quality.

We notice large olive orchards, and several patches of pretty good Havana tobacco, as we approach Rome and strike the Tiber river, along which the railroad runs. There are vast areas of bottom lands, principally used for pasture, on which we see large herds of Italian cattle and horses.

Italian Live Stock.

These Italian cattle are of a dirty white color, except a few which are black, and they all have very long horns. The horses are generally of an inferior breed. We see a few tank and lean-sided porkers with noses like our old fashioned plow points, and an occasional flock of geese. The towns and villages in this part of Italy are generally built on the tops of high hills, and have a very aged and dilapidated look. It is evident that this was done so as to render them defensible against the rapacity of their neighbors when the country was in an almost constant state of war.

When we leave Rome we take a south-east course, turning around the city and running through the vast Campagna, which resembles our western prairies to some extent. The most of it is used for pasture, where we see the usual herds of white cattle and horses. Part of this land is drained, but during the rainy season it is full of water, which is the cause of much malaria. A portion of it is covered with a kind of furze, rendering it almost useless. We soon strike the blue Mediterranean and reach Ostia, 40 miles distant from the sea port of Rome. It is rather a small place, but has extensive fortifications. We now gradually take a western course, sometimes closely bordering the coast, and at other times ten or twelve miles away from it. We pass a number of towns, but none of particular note. The country is rather barren, with mountains on our right.

The Leaning Tower of Pisa.

We at length reach Pisa, distant from Rome about 200 miles, where we remain all night. We are going to give the next morning, only to see the celebrated Leaning Tower. Pisa is a place of some historic interest, and at one time occupied an important position in Italian affairs. It now only contains a population of 20,000. We leave here for Milan, distant about 250 miles, via Genoa and Spezia, both important seaports on the Mediterranean. Our route lays along the sea coast, and we pass through such a succession of tunnels that it is almost impossible to obtain a sight of the country. We travel through no less than 85 of these tunnels in a distance of less than 50 miles; some of them seven miles long. We had occasional glimpses of the sea coast, where we see women washing and men lazily mending and drying their clothes in the sun.

Genoa, the most important commercial city in Italy, having a population of 180,000. It has very extensive fortifications, which have a capacity for 10,000 soldiers.

Vineyards and Orchards.

Along the mountain sides are large vine yards and orchards of citrus Figs, peaches and plums grow abundantly. The gardens appear to produce about the same vegetables that ours do, but the Italians do not make much account of the potato. Indian corn is grown extensively, but it is the small or sweet variety generally, and they plant it too thick to yield well.

We get away from the mountains at last, and reach Alessandria, which is a railroad center, where we change cars for Milan, and are obliged to lay over for 2 1/2 hours. Here we had some difficulty about our tickets, and none of the railroad officials being able to speak English, nor we Italian, there was a deadlock which was finally broken by our hunting up a gentleman who could speak English, who kindly left his papers and went with us, and straightened out our difficulty. We felt very grateful, for it was about the only disinterested act of kindness we have had shown us in Italy.

On Marengo's Bloody Field.

The celebrated battle field of Marengo, where Napoleon defeated the Austrians on June 14, 1800, and where the French General Desaix fell, was next viewed. The ride from Alessandria to Milan was on a train equal in speed to that on the Quarryville road. It was a tedious, but not a dull ride, but was reached Milan at 5:30 p. m., and took quarters at the Hotel d'Alban, which is a good Italian hostelry. Milan (Milano they call it here) is a large and flourishing city of over 300,000 inhabitants. In the old part of the town the streets are narrow, but in the new portions they are broad, and the houses are well built. It has large manufactories of silks and woollens. In sculpture it makes a specialty, having many artists of high repute, as well as in paintings.

Milan's famous Cathedral.

There is a large number of very fine public buildings, art galleries and elegant churches, but the pride of Milan is the Duomo cathedral, of which we had heard much, and it certainly fully came up to our expectations. We have already spoken of the one at Cologne, this being in the same style of architecture (Gothic). We do not think it quite as symmetrical as the Cologne cathedral, but being of white marble and its surroundings better, gives it a whiter and cleaner appearance. According to the guide books it is 177 feet in length, and 137 feet wide; the tower is 153 high, the dome 220 and the tower 300. The roof is adorned with 95 Gothic turrets and the exterior with over 2,000 marble statues of life size. It has been about 500 years since it was founded, and it is not finished yet, as it is intended to add two additional rows of turrets to the roof.

The interior is supported by 32 pillars, each 12 feet in diameter, the summits of which are adorned with canopied niches, with statues instead of capitals. The pavement consists of mosaic in marbled and different colors, and the walls are skillfully painted in imitation of perforated stone work. We ascended to the roof, which is of marble slabs, like that of Girard college, and from which there is one of the finest views imaginable.

Artists at Lake Como.

The rich plains of Lombardy, on which were fought the battles of Marengo, Novferino and Magenta, stretch out on all sides, and on a clear day the highest peaks of the Alps can be seen. We leave Milan and reach this place on Saturday evening, where we find our baggage which we had sent from Venice, and the first letters and papers from home since we left London. We shall remain here until Tuesday, and from here we go to Lucerne, in Switzerland.
