PATALLY SHOT IN A SALOON QUARREL The Billiant Young Lottville Attorney Sect Down in a Har-room-ratal End of a Debauch.

At 10 o'clock Sunday merning Henry The rapid and frequent changes in the weather are so many warnings to be prepared with ple responded and asked what he would

We are ready to meet the call for light-weight Overcoats and between-season Suits as well as the heavier grades.

"I want to see Andy," was the reply. Conneilman Wepler heard the remark and started back. As the two men met they shock hands. Wepler noticed that Mr. Clay was not nober, and remarked to him that he had been dricking.

Only a little bit," said Mr. Clay, leaning against the counter.

I started out for a little fun to night, and I am bound to have it. Andy I want $4."

"Can't let you have it, Henry," respended the proprietor of the saloon, good naturedly; "you ought to go home, old boy. It's time you were in bed. Take my advice, Henry, and go home."

Mr. Clay became highly enraged. It is said that he called Wepler several hard names, and then left the salcon Subsequent developments go to show that he visited his room in the Cromic block, of Fifth street, and there procured a pisiol. Ten minutes later he reappeared at Wepler's saloon, and displayed a Colt's revolver, which was taken away from him by a looker on, and laid ont of his reach behind the counter. Wepler look the weapon, and, returning it to Mr. Clay. said: "If you want to aboot, now shoot." At the same moment Wepler drew his own pistel and fired two shots, one of which took effect in Mr. Clay's abdomen and laid him low in a pool of blood. Tho several surgeons who have charge of the case pronounce the wound certainly (atal. Wepler, who is in custody, mays that the shooting was done in nell defense, although several witnesses insist that Mr. Clay made no effort to shoot. The affair has caused a great sensation in Louisville, on account of the prominence of Mr. Clay, who is known al. over the state as one of the most brill aut young lawyers in the South. He is the grandson of the great Henry lay, and the only one of that line who has inherited old Henry's wonderful gift of oratory. He chose the law for his pro-fession, and, coming to Louisville, early established a reputation for thoroughness in oriminal practice. While yet a young man he was elected prosecuting attorney of the Louisville city court. When Howgate organized his expedition to the Arctic regions, in 1880, Mr. Clay, who had given some study to the scientific questions involved, received an invitation to accompany the party, and resigned his office in order to accept. He here the hardships of the expedition well, though never a man of obust habits, and ever afterwards evinced great interest in Arctic exploration, lecuring saveral times in public upon the subject. Since his return to Louisville he has confined his attention principally to aw, though he has been interested come-! polities, and has been talked ress from this district. Mr. is about thirty six years and he

He said that some time Deposit vauit. He said that some time ago Emery D. Fisher, superintendent of the posteffice box department, together with a Mr. Stevens, dry goods dealer on Winter street, were placed in charge of a large trust estate belonging to a Miss Wilson and her relatives. The securities were deposited in safety vauits and were carefully looked after by the two gentle-men mentioned. About three weeks ago both of the trustees made an examination of the funds and found everything all right. In addition to the trustees, access to the vaults was also had by Charles E. Stevens, son of Mr. Stevens, one of the trustees. Some days ago that young man left Boston, but the significance was attached by the trusties to his departure and it was supposed that he would return to Boston in a short time. But his return was for some unknown reason delayed and floally, it is alleged, the trustees upon making another examination of the property in their charge discovered that there was some $20,000 missing from the vanit. Suspicion at once pointed to young Stevens. The police soon accertained that $14,000 worth of bonds had been lest with a Milk street broker, on which an instalment had been paid. After numerous juquiries they learned that young Stevens was the party that took the bonds. When last heard of he was in Jersey City. He dabbled in stocks considerably and met with severy losses. The police are of the opinion that he did not take them at one time, but at various times since the trustees examined the contents of the safe. A warrant for his arrest is out.

PIRING REELT'S VAPORIO GUN

The inventor Says He Will Get Moto-The Keely meter vaporio gun was exhibited Saturday at the government rauge at Sandy Hook. A steamboat carried a brass band, bankers, brokers, and soint-tific men to the number of 200, Mr. Keely, in his shirt sleeves, attended to the gun, currounded by a number of officers appointed by the secretary of war. A target was located 500 yards away. When the signal was given, Mr. Keely touched the valve. There was a slight report as the inch and a quarter bullet left the gue, and then the visitors crowded about, wondering at force that could pass so quickly through so small a tube as that connecting the gun with the vaporio reservoir. The gun was fired nineteen times, the last ball pass-ing through one three-inch plans and half way through a second. There was to diminution in the force of the disolarges and it was claimed that over 100 shots could have been fired with the five gallons of mysterious energy stored up, and that the last shot would have just as much power as the first one. Mr. Keely said his force was made in what he called his generator, out of half a wineglass of water and a little air. After the firing the tube and a little air. After the firing the tube was detached from the gun and the stop cock turned slightly, so that the force could escape slowly, thus permitting the visitors to touch, taste and test it. On the boat's return Mr. Keely made a brief speech, saying that he yielded to the pressure of Keely motor stockholders to test this gun publicly. In six weeks, he said, he would get his patents, and then the public should see this wonderful energy applied as a motive power. He explained the long wait of ten years as the natural conse-sibly be compressed air, carbonic acid gas or any force known to the scientific world. He said that life is short, the motor searct precious, and that Mr. Keely should con-fide his secret to some one, so that in case of sudden death it would not be lost

THE RETROLDS STATUE, An Opicion That the Horse Is Too Large and the Sian Too Small.

From the Philadelphia Pimes.

Reynolds was a man who appeared of less than medium size and he was often mounted upon a large horse. This fact, however, was not essent'al to his character and was not the thing that was to be commemorated, certainly not the thing that was to be emphasized, in his mountent, It was a statue of Raynolds that was wanted and not of a pawing stallion with a small man on his back. Yet everyone will agree that the stallion on the pedestal before the city hall is of very much more consequence than his rider. In fact, from the front of the statue the rider cannot be the front of the statue the rider cannot be seen, and it is necessary to make a circuit of the figure to find a point from which his face can be discerned. There is nothing to be said against the horse, except that its attliure, with its weight thrown back on the ham hes and one fore-foot upraised, is not explained by anything in the attliude of the rider. It is a very large and powerful animal, with an enormous head and neck, and it may per haps be intended as a tribute to Reveolds' daring that so slight a man Reynolds' daring that so slight a man should mount so fierce a beast. However true to nature all this may bo, the on deniable result of the emphasis given to the horse is to dominish the dignity of the man, who has most evidently received a much smaller share of thought and labor from the sculptor that the animal he rides. The face is not without force. It is a somewhat rugged likeness of the original and has the expression of earnestness and alertness that gave power to features not ordinarily berole. But we do not find in the portrait as a whole that compact and vigorous manhood that we associate with the memory of Reynolds nor any element of the heroic beyond that which is given it by the large scale of the work.

A Pleasure Party in Parit Ed. Stokes, Larry Jerome, J. B. McCullough, of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, and several others had a narrow escape from death by drowning in Long Island Sound on Saturday. The party were out on a pleasure trip in Mr. Stokes' steam yacht, the "Fra Diavolo," and were dis cussing an elaborate menu when the vacht struck a sunken rock, knocking a hole in her bottom, and immediately she bogan to fill. Signals of distress were sounded, but brought no assistance. Finally it was decided to take to the open hoats. Mr. Jerome, however, was suffering from gout and preferred to take his chances on the and preferred to take his change of yacht, rather than to face the tramp on the sandy Convectiont shore. Mr. Mc-Cullough volunteered to stay with him, and the others started out in the boat. They had not gone far when it was dis covered that the seams of the beat were wide open. After a walk of five miles, they found a rail-read station, and eventually reached the Hoffman house very much exhausted. With the assistance of some of the crew, who had remained on board with them, Messrs, Jerome and McCullough succeed ed in temporarily stopping the leak in the yacht, and were towed to New York by a tug, which happened to pass by
