THE PACIFIC TRAGEDY

HOW MICHAEL DE YOUNG WAS SHOT. His Assellant Takes Him Unawares and Pats Two Hallets in Him-The Wounded

Man's Oritical Condition. Man's Orisical Condition.

Michael H. De Young, who was shot Wednesday night by young Spreckels in San Francisco, passed a quiet night, free from pain or fever. The doctors intend making a second effort to extract the remaining bullet. Less danger is anticipated from this bullet than from the effects of one already extracted. The shoulder blade was slightly shattered and the broken pieces of bone remain within the wound. It is feared that these pieces the wound. It is feared that these pieces of bone may induce inflammation and high fever. If the broken pieces can be removed the danger will be lessened.

De Young's friends express great anxiety over his case. Although the doctors refuse to make any absolute statement as to his condition, it is well known at the present hour—noon—that they entertain the gravest fears. Should inflammation set in near the sub clavain artery and the artery burst, nothing could artery and the artery burst, nothing could save his life.

Spreckels has been placed under sur-veillance and there is no possibility of his escaping from the city, even should he desire to do so.

By mutual agreement between the prosecuting and defending attorneys a further hearing in the case was indefini-tely postponed, as the condition of both De Young and Spreckels prevented their appearance.

The fact that Spreckels was admitted to bail after having attempted to assassi-nate De Young, and in the attempt to do so inflicting such dagerous wounds, excites nuch comment. The particulars of the shooting are as follows: Mr. De Young entered the business office and then passed into his private ness office and then passed into his private office in order to get some children's books which he had purchased. He came out again to say something to one of the clerk's, when he heard some one say:

"Mr. De Young, I would like to see you."
He turned, and almost before he had time to recognize the person who spoke, Spreckels fired. The bullet struck De Young in the arm above the elbow.

the arm above the elbow. De Young, who was encumbered with his overcoat and a bundle of children's book, dashed behind the high desk with the intention of running from there to his private office. Before he had time to do , however, Spreckels fired a second shot, which took effect in his shoulder. De Young then made a second dash for his private office, but in doing so slipped and fell on the floor. Spreckels rushed up, and standing over him, fired a third shot. This bullet struck the children's books, and the chances are that the books saved his life. George W. Emerson, an advertising clerk, then grabbed a revolver, which was lying in a drawer in one of the desks, ad fired at Spreekels, hitting him in the lett arm, causing only a slight wound. Before Spreckels had time to fire another shot J. G. Chesley, the cashier, sprang from behind the railing seized Spreckels' revolver and prevented him from using it. While Chesley was struggling with him two other clerks rushed up and overpowered Spreakels. A moment after a police officer rushed in and arrested him. Emerson the advertising clerk, who fired at Spreckels, was also arrested. Both men were taken to the city prison.

De Young was immediately removed in a cab to his residence. His wounds, which at first were believed to be slight, proved on examination more serious than was supposed. It was found that the first bullet had passed within a sixteenth of an bleed to death in a short time.

No other reason for the shooting is assigned than that already stated. Spreckels is 27 years of age. He was released on $5,000 bail. His father, Sir Claus Spreckels, became his security Emerson, the advertising clerk, was released on $1,000 bail.

Public opinion over the shooting is more crystallized this morning and the sympathy is all on the side of De Young.

A more careful reading of the articles which incited Spreckels to do the shooting confirms the belief that there was nothing in them to justify a murderous attempt.

ANEUDORES OF ACTORS.

Humorous Stories of Some Great Lights of the English Stage. From Charles Hervey in the London Theatre. In the days-now far distant-I fre-quented the fover of the Vaudeville in its old home on the Place de la Bourse, an expression current among the actors of that theatre for some time puzzled me that theatre for some time puzzled me sorely. This was no other than the monosyllable "bath," pronounced, of course, "batt," and signifying "good:" but why it bore that meaning, and whence it originated, was a mystery. One evening, when the phrase in question had been more frequently applied than usual to a piece then in rehearsal, I begged Mile.— to enlighten me, whereupon, to my astonishment, she laughingly remarked that, being "Angleesh," I ought to know.
"What has that to do with it?" I asked.
"Everything," she replied. "You must

"Everything," she replied. "You must remember that formerly your best letter-paper always had the work 'Bath' stamped Philip Schum, Son & Co's on it; well, some one chose to faucy that as the paper was good, 'Bath' must necessarily mean as much. 'Volla tout.'

I recollect once hearing Mme. Dorval, when at the height of her celebrity, relate some of her early experience while a mem-ber of a strolling company, wandering about the provinces after the fashion of Scarron's "Roman Comique," "On one oc-casion," she said, "the theatre was so small that there was no room on the stage for the chorists, who were perched on small that there was no room on the stage for the chorists, who were perched on ladders outside the building, their heads alone being visible to the audience. It was a wet night, and we—for I was one of them—had to sing as joyously as we could under the circumstances—

Ah! quel beau jour! ah! quel plaisir : Ah! pour nous quelle lete! shivering with cold and drenched with the rain trickling through the holes of our umbrellas! And yet," she added with a sigh, "I was happler then than I am now!"

Somewhere about forty years ago, Farren, the "cock salmon," was starring at Brightou, and selected among other pieces for his benefit, Buckstone's farce "Nicholas Flam." In it the part of Shrimp, the lawyer's clerk, was given to a low comedian more remarkable for check than talent, who when kindly admonished to the star to avoid undue exaggeration, took the hint very ungraciously and replied with a sneer that he wanted no one to teach him his business. After the performance, during which the wanted no one to teach him his business. After the performance, during which the clerk's incompetency had spoiled more than one of Farren's effects, the latter, in a high state of indignation, bounced into Vining's (the manager's) room and angrily declared that he had never been so badly supported in his life, particularly singling out the actor cast for Shrimp, "Shrimp! indeed!" he cried with increasing irritation, "why, confound the fellow, he gives himself as many airs as if he were a prayen."

The famous contralto, Mme. Pisaroni, on her first appearance in Paris, conscious of the unpromising effect produced on the audience by her extreme ugliness, came forward and requested them to "hear her sing, and then judge her afterment".

I have read somewhere or other-where I cannot for the life of me recollect—an anecdote of a now forgotten actor called anecdote of a now forgotten actor called Rosembeau, which is too good to be lost. He resembled the rolling stone that gathers no moss, for he seldom remained long in anytheatre, was always in debt, and to make matters worse, had several children, who, like their father, lived literally from hand to mouth. One evening while his little family were anxiously awaiting their customary allowance of bread and milk he discovered, on examining his pockets, that the few sous in his possession would barely suffice for the next day's breakfast. A bright idea struck

"Who will have a sou instead of sup per ?" be asked.

"I—I!" cried one and all. Whereupon the food parent distributed his remaining coins among them and sent them to bed. When morning came the poor children were naturally hungrier than ever; but Rosambeau was equal to the emergency.
"Whoever wants breakfast," he said

' must give papa a sou.''
It need hardly be added that they

Etiquette to Diinking. from the London Brewer's Guardian, The custom of touching glasses prior to drinking health is common in England and other countries, and especially in Ger-many. It is curious to trace how this custom has prevailed, and still exists even among savage tribes. To drink out of the same cup and to eat off the same plate was one of the ways in which the ancients celebrated a marriage, and the wedding feast continues to be not the least important of the marriage ceremonies to the present day. The Indians of Brazil retain a custom of drinking together a little brandy, as a sign that the marriage is concluded. In China similar customs are met with. In the mediaval banquets of Germany it was the custom to pass a "loving cup" from hand to hand, but this gradually necessitated that the cup should be of enormous size, and thus smaller cups or glasses were adopted, and the old custom was conformed to by the drinkers touching their glasses before drinking. The ceremony attending the passing and drinking out of the "loving cup," as practised at our great city festivals, and at some of our college halls, is said to have arisen from the assassination of King Edward.

It was then the custom of the Anglo-Saxons to pass round a large cup, from which each guest drank. Who thus drank stood up, and, as he lifted up the cup with both hands, his body was exposed without any defense to a blow, and the occasion was often seized by an enemy to murder him. To prevent this the follow-ing plan was adopted: When one of the company stord up to drink he required the companion who sat next to be his pledge —that is, to be responsible for protecting him against anybody who should attempt to take advantage of his defenseless position. This companior stood up also, and raised his drawn sword in his hand to defend the drinker while drinking. This practice, in a somewhat altered form, continued long after the condition of society had ceased to require it, and was the origin of the modern practice of placing by drinking. pledging by drinking. In drinking from the "loving cup" as now practiced, each person rises and takes the cup in his hand to drink, and, at the same time, the person had been struck, would have caused him to latter takes the cup in his turn, the individual next to him does the same.

"Immediate Reliet."

To be relieved at all, of such an abominable pest as neuralgia, is gravitying, but imagine the great dailght of Mr. J.
