CHRISTMAS LITERATURE.

TREES THAT COME ALL THE WAY FROM MAINE.

should Be Erected and Put Into Shape. The Origin of Good Old Santa Claus. Children's Affection for Him.

A Christmas without a Christmas tree is regarded as a very small affair by the little ones and they will be glad to hear that these essentials of the great Christian holiday are very plentiful the present season.

They come all the way from Maine, the good ones, and they can be bought for sums ranginging from fifty cents to $15. The necessary for home decorations, and they are only sold occasionally for church anniversaries and Christmas festivals.

ries and Christmas festivals.

An open winter is invariably a bad one for the trade. It gives too many sellers an opportunity to vend their wares in the street, to the prejudice of the store keepers. A good snow storm not only drives the curb stone venders off the street, but it inspires most people, mere or less, with the notion that there is nothing that makes such a cozy contrast to be anowy streets outside as a pretty Christmas tree inside.

As a rule activity nover begins in the tree business till about the fifth day before Christmas, because buyers do not care to have the trees around the house any longer than just during the holidays.

How to Put Up a Christmas Tree.

How to Put Up a Christmas Tree.

Provide an overgreen tree of suitable size and shape and place it in a room not to be used until Christmas day. The tree may be held firmly in place by planting it in a hole bored in a heavy and square block of wood. If the tree be small set upon table. It is not specified by the planting of the plant block of wood. If the tree be small set upon a table. If a large size make a rude platform of suitable height and place it on that. Cover the table or platform with green baize, or better still, let the chitdren gather mosses of teheus and cover with these. When wax tapers cannot be indulged in substitute ordinary hanterns covered with gay colored flannel. Hang these on the tree where they will produce the best affect and make festions of pop-corn strung on threads, from which suspend pop-corn balls. The effect of the gay lights and the white pop-corn among the green of the tree will prove a pleasing sight to the little folk. The tree is now ready to receive its burden and all articles to be placed on it should be given over to the charge of one person to insure pleasant surprise. one person to insure pleasant surprise. The Origin of Santa Claus.

The Origin of Santa Claus.

The history of Santa Claus—a curious mixture of truth and fable—goes far back into ancient history. Centuries ago a child was born in Asia Miner who received the name of St. Nicholas. His parents were rich and of high rank, and desiring to express their gratitude to God for the birth of their son, they resolved to educate him for the Christian priesthood. The child was sober and thoughtful, and while yet young his parents died and he inherited their great wealth. He considered the riches a sacred trust; he fed the hungry, he clothed the destitute, and performed all kinds of good deeds as secretly as possible. As a priest he was groully believed; as a bishop he centinued his benevolence. After his death, the church cannonized him and he became one of the greatest patron saints, being revered as the help of the poor, the protector of the weak, and as the especial patron saint of little children who were truefit to believe that help of the poor, the protector of the weak, and as the especial patron saint of little children, who were taught to believe that their gifts came from him. St. Nicholas was the name given him by the monks, and this was finally clipped down to Sainta Claus, who is still represented as retaining his old habits of secret benevolence and coming down the chimney at nights laden with Christmas presents for children. A pleusant fiction it is to them under the cover of which that charming secrety concerning the donors of gifts is kept up, though little eyes, ears and minds are keen, and Saita Claus is usually very well known to them as a much more modern well known to them as a nuch more modern personage than old St. Nichotas. But the children enjoy the harmless pretense, the mysterious filling of stockings and the heavily laden Christmas tree.

A MORTIFIED MASHER

How a Little Man Punished a Street Car Ruffian. In a Twenty-third street car in New York In a Twenty-third street car in New York on Sunday evening, a gentleman of about 40 years, of slight but wiry build, was seated between two ladies, and opposite them was a young and rather good looking girl, well but plainly dressed and of modest, self-possessed manner. She evidently belonged to the working class. As the car went eastward across Fourth avenue a man of stalwart physique and rather dissipated face swung through the car, deposited his fare in the box and sat down deliberately alongside of the girl. She concealed a look which was of partial recognition, coupled with annoyance, and turned her face toward the window, with every appearance of being nervous and ill at and turned her face toward the window, with every appearance of being nervous and ill at ease. The newcomer, who were a high hat, a light overcoat, a silver-topped stick and was entirely at his ease, allowed his elbow to rest over the arm of the girl. She moved rlong a foot or so in the seat, and he calmly followed her. This sert of thing went on until they were both up in the corner of the The gentieman escorting the two ladies watch the performance with nervous anxiety, and at every fresh annoyance offered the girl opposite the blood would slowly mount to his face and then recede. Finally he drew off his gloves, his hands trembling violently, but he folded the gloves and placed them quietly in his pocket. His two companions evidently understood his feelings, and one put her hand affectionately on his arm.

"I think," she said, "Alfred, that we had better walk the rest of the way. It is very

She half rose in her seat, but did not move. He was still glaring at the big man across the car, who returned his look once in a while with the most tranquil indifference imaginable. Meanwhile the poor working girl, who had apparently been having quile as much excitement as the little man opposite her, rose to change her seat. As she did so the man besides her took her gently by the arm and pulled her down into the seat again. Thereupon the little man sprang to his feet, doubled up his fist, pointed his finger at the man across the car, and said slowly and with great decision: "You infernal scoundrel, if throw you out of the car."

The words were delivered in rather a singular manner, but there was no doubt about She half rose in her seat, but did not move

The words were delivered in rather a singular manner, but there was no doubt about the earnestness of the man who uttered them. The big man simply smiled, and deliberately turned around and dropped his hand on the girl's arm again. What followed occupied a very short space of time. The white-faced and wiry man pounced upon his bigger rival as a hawk does upon a chicken. There was no attempt at hitting or clawing. He jumped at his throat and twined both of his hands into the breast of the man's coat. Then there was a struggle, and the big masher lay flat on his back, with his head out on the platform and against the dashboard and his long legs stretching into the car. Before be could get up the little man had tossed his cane and hat into the street. His face was working into extratordinary grimaces sufficient to alarm a Colossus. And as the man lay on the floor and looked up at it the conviction seemed to enter his soul that he had had enough. He scrambled awkwardly to his feet and stood in the door in some doubt whether to tackle his assailant or not, while the assailant said in the same sing-song and falsette voice:

"If you come in this car again I will break."

dsetto voice : "If you come in this car again I will break

"If you come in this car again I will break your nose."

The car had not stopped during the struggle, and the man jumped off and left his assailant in full possession. Two of the buttons had been ripped off of the gallant's coat in the scrimmage and the little man picked them up, presented one to the girl and put the other in his pocket, with the remark:
"These will do for souvenirs."

The girl said the man had annoyed her for several night in succession, but she was sure he would never trouble her again. The little man gave her a courtly bow as he left the car, and it was noticeable that he trod the floor with a tip-toed grace and haughty mien that belongs by right to conquerors.

Lieutenant Greely and His Companions Showing Signs of Early Dissolution. Lieutenant Greely and the other members of the Arctic party who were rescued with him have been in Washington for some time working hard on the report of their winter among the leebergs. Since that time, however, the confinement of the office has told severely upon him, and he is beginning to show symptoms of nervous trouble that alarms his friends. He stops in his work frequently, puts his trembling hands to his head and complains of terrible pains that almost take away the power of thought. His memory also seems to be failing, and at times is exceedingly difficult for him to call to mind a triend's name or remember dates and incidents in his narative. His face is as handsome and full as ever, and his bushy beard adds to the impression, when looking at him from a distance that he is healthy and strong. A closer inspection shows, however that his flesh is flabby and soft and his hand when you grasp it feels uncanny and swollen.

Long, Beainerd, Connell and the other members of the party are complaining of a growing weakness and nervous troubles like those Lieutenant Greely suffers under, and some of them tremble as though palsied when they attempt to walk.

It is alleged by one who has been cured of a consuming taste for alcoholic stimulant that a half ounce of ground quassia steeped in a pint of vinegar, a small teaspoonful of the decoction to be drunk in a little water every time the thirst comes on, affords a certain cure.
