THE CHRISTMAS MAIL.

MAS CARDS LUADING DOWN THE TIRED LETTER CARRIERS.

of the Latest Novables Prepared for the May Beason—Their Appropriateness of Design and Beauty of Execution—Henry Postal Business.

The Christmas mail is unusually heavy his year, not only by reason of the vast number of Christmas cards sent through he mails, but on account of the numerous Christmas puckages sent from and received at the Lancaster postoffice. In consequence of this there has been tively work at the postoffice in the active days and Postmaster Marshall incomed us that the amount of mail matter has been about 65 per cent larger than last bristmas. The greater part of the mail counts to packages, and the increase applies to that delivered in Lancaster as well a sent abroad. Sunday hours will be observed at the postoffice to-morrow.

The Christmas Cards of the Season.

The Christmas Cards of the Season. Ithough there are none of the more pretious prize cards in the ordinary specidone themselves this year. In these ors banners and bannerets occupy promit places. There is a star card in two deoligns. One of these represents the child Christ playing with the lambs surrounded by therubs; the other shows a church interior with rosy-cheeked children singing carols within the star, while the star itself is surnded with holly and merry Christmas The backs of these cards are orna d with a conventional design of drapery, with a picturesque winter scene in the background. These designs are bright and pretty. They are made either with plain edges or ered with a rich silken fringe. bordered with a rich silken fringe.

There is another pretty set in three floral designs. One is a bunch of the thisties of old Scotland, another is the sweet-scented clover, while a third is a bunch of the beautiful golden rod and asters. These, like the cards mentioned above, are shown either with plain edges or bordered with silken fringe. Another very pretty design is made out of the cards in this set by combining two of them in boy force and commencing the cards in this set by combining two of them in a box form, and ornamenting the combination thus formed with ricily colored sath fringe and silken tassels. No adequate idea of the richness and beauty, or the artistic manner in which the different colors and materials har-monize and blend together, can be obtained from any illustration in pressie black and

In addition to these, there are many other beautiful cards, which include some very unique and pretty designs. Among these are four oil chromo designs representing dif-ferent members of the animal kingdom as rejoicing over the good-will and cheer of Christians day. ferent members of the animal kingdom as rejoicing over the good-will and cheer of Christmas day. One has an old bear, with its front paws which serve as its arms, loaded with holly, dancing before two cute little cubs in clumsy gies; another bears three sedate owls perched before a book of music, from which they are chanting with solemn gladness hymns of praise; a third has a timid hare and ungainly turtle wishing each other a merry Christmas, while the fourth represents two playful kittens gravely seated before a book, from which they are singing a tender "mew." sie in honor of the day. The back of each of these cards is beautifully illuminated with a design representing a most solemn-looking owl perched upon one of the horns of a cresceent, which is moving through light, fleecy clouds. The other specimens are equally as fine and beautiful, and together form as pretty a line of these cards as has yet been brought out.

Too Awfully Grand. From the Columbia Courant.

One of the best of our county papers-the Lancaster Intelligencer-was last week dressed up in a suit of Collins & McLeester's best type. With other improvements it looks just too awfully grand for any thing, and we congratulate our friends on their taste and enterprise.
