A Viennese BridefWho Came Over to Her Tardy Bridegroom and Would have no Nonsenso Nor Delay About the Ceremony. The Romantie Story Told.

A pretty little romance was terminated in New York on Christmas eve by the marriage of Jacques Gewitschen and Dora Medelburgh. Vienna. The bridegroom was the son of a wealthy Austrian leather merchant, but as he refused to attend to business, he was some three years since sent to the United States to break up his evil associations. Called back to Vienna, he evinced a desire to learn the leather business, and what leisure hours remained after the duties of the day he devoted to the society of a lady whom he soon came to regard as the loveliest of her sex. Dora Modelburgh, a tall brunette, with a will and a fortune of her own-the latter amounting it is said, to half a million floring-consented to his suit. So did the parents, and and all went well for the lovers in that gay capital.

capital. Jacques came to New York again to open a branch of his father's house. He was to return to Vienna has spring to be married, when a cable dispatch announced the failure of Gewitschen & Co., for a million florins. Jacques was in despail. Dora nourished a hope which not all the reasoning and imper-turity of her parents and friends could up-root of yet becoming Madame Gowitscher. Deprived of his allowance from home, his growing business nipped in the bud, Jacques proving business nipped in the bud, Jacques page the work of re-building his ruined fortunes by selling at retail, in a peripatetic way, various articles composed under the word "notons."

way, various articles composed in word "notions." A correspondence, largely on the young woman's side, was kept up. She wanted him to return and share her home and florins. He refused, She insisted, and florins. He refused, She insisted, and finally amounced her detormination to sail at once for New York and deliver him from his distress by marrying him. Without at once for New York with the without waiting to receive a written remonstrance, she came, borne on the wings of love. On Wednesday they met at the wharf. She was radiant in silk and furs. Time and separation had enhanced her charms beyond his fondest expectation.

ward." A cosch was called, and together they went to the law office of Delahumter & Vilas, in the Tribuce building. There John Dela-humter, an old friend, drew up the marriage papers. The acqueduct commission was in session, with Mayor Edson in the chair, in the adjoining room. He stopped the decision on a contract to give ear to the legal repre-sentative of Jacques and Dors. Informed of the interesting facts already narrated, he con-sented to marry them at the close of the com-mission session. From that time every mission session. From that time every parliamentary tactic of which he was master was employed to hasten the proceedings. Hymen waited patiently and in smiles on Hymen wated patiently and in sumos on his honor's pleasure. At five o'clock a pro-cession started across the city hall park. The mayor was followed by Jacques and Dora, John Delahunter and a cloud of clerks and curious witnesses. The snow fell fast and the rude wind deepened the blushes upon the checks of the fair Austrian girl, who clung to the arm of her lover, oblivious to all else. Arrived at the city hell, the to all elso to all else. Arrived at the city hall, the mayor found his office closed and locked. mayor found his office closed and locked. The bridal party halled and the mayor seemed irresolute. A besceeping look from Dora decided him. "The side door," he refed, and led the way through a gloomy passage. A single gas jet burned above the heads of the youthful couple, and illuminated the benign countenance of the mayor as he stood in front of his deak and said the fateful works.

ds. a they were married, and on Christmas eve Dora saw the end of her long quest, and every witness there, from the mayor down, wished he was as sure of a merry Christmas as was Jacques.

A CHRISTMAS WISH BY PROP. WILLIAM M. NEVIS

World that I were a millionaire Ob, then, what I would do !--Por many projects, fresh and fair, Object them to my view ; And if I were I would take care Each one to carry through.

Then well I know that I would go All barough the eity wide, And seek the places. Ar and near, Where most the poor reside : And then I'd serve each joyless home With bounties for Christ Ude.

Oh, tell me not that, had I got Of gold a hidden store, I would not chose it thus to use. But strive to make it more. Or mercy trest my dearest friends. Regardless of the poor.

Full many social friends have L. Of whom I'm proud to boast, And were I rich I would not fail To be their jovial host, But still would send alroad some cheer, For those that need II most.

Were I possessid of ample means. I fear not to avow. To prompt me to the kindliest deeds. My heart I would allow. Till Decemens a poor again... Almost...as I am now.

Oh, many things have made me glad. And some have made me grieve. But still this truth I'm holding fest. And ever will believe-'Tis better far, by greater odds. To give than to receive. -Reformed Church Messenger.

iength concluded and blessings and congrat-ulations were next in order. Some of the guests sympathized with the young bride upon the delay in the proceedings. With a merry twinkle in her eye and her face brightening up with smiles, she told the secret. She wanted to be "the boes," it appears. She explained that a married lady friend, the wite of a broad street jeweler, had told her not to permit the groom to pass the ring over the second joint, because if he succeeded he then would be the "boos" and rule the roost, and she desired that dis-tinction reserved to herself. The officiating clergyman hearing of this explanation mildly admonished the bride upon the folly of super-stition. The bride and groom are a happy pair. A reception was tendered to them at pair. #### CIDER FOR THE MILLION.

An Unprecedented Yield of the Delicious Juice. From the N. Y. Times.

Cider making is at its height, and nover at this time of the year has the product been so cheap. The apple crop of 1880 was immense, but this year's crop is as large, if not larger. The increase is in the Western states, Ohio and Michigan raising big crops. New York raised a big crop, but in some counties it is an off year, while in Oawego county, for instance, the crop was never so large. The facilities for turning apples into elder in instance, the erop was never so harge. The facilities for turning apples into cider in 1880 were at least 25 per cent. Less than they are this year. Much of the crop of 1880 was wasted, millions of apples having been destroyed by an early frost. The greater part of the crop of 1884 will be utilized by the 10,000 or more cider mills in the United States, with capacities ranging from 100 to 50,000 harrels of cider in a season. It is esti-mated that those mills will average 500 harrels for each mill, or 5,500,000 harrels in the aggregate. At least one-third of that quantity will go into apple brandy and vin-egar, leaving about 3,600,000 harrels to repre-sent the cider crop this year. The local de-mand in New York city and adjoining eities from September to September is estimated a high as 500,000 harrels. The price paid for apples has averaged less than 30 cents a hun-dred weight, and the price of julies at mills as ruled at about 4 cents a gallon.
