Paris correspondence of the New York World has the following: Paris in general and the American colony in particular are greatly excited over the ap-proaching Mackay-Colonna wedding. Daily the wildest and most extravagant rumors are circulated as to the sum which the bride's father proposes to present to the young cou-ple to start them, as it were, in life, and only this morning on entering my cafe I was greeted by a French journalist, who in other respects is most worth of credence; with the astounding announcement that Mr. Mackay had deeded over to his daughter his shares of the new Commercial Cable as pin-money!

Principe Colonna, the prospective bride-groom, springs from the Stiglianni branch of the historic Colonnas, who vied with the Orsini during the Middle Ages in making southern and meridianal Italy a most unpleasant country to dwell in. On dit that the union of the two families is a good thing. The title of the bridegroom is, of course, irre-proachable, and he is undoubtedly the posproachable, and he is undoubtedly the possessor of some score Neapolitan castles, on the kalsomining and restoration of which to their pristine glory no doubt much California gold will be expended. Certainly Principe Colonna is several cuts better than the average foreigner who allows himself to fall an easy victim to the wiles spread by ambiticus American mothers. He is not a confirmed roue, nor has he as yet figured in any scandalous D. C. proceedings. He is a fair shot and has time and again carried his yacht into Oriental waters. And then he is young—only twenty-seven years of age—no trifling ad-and has time and again carried his yacht into Oriental waters. And then he is young—only twently-seven years of age—no trifling advantage. A friend and a compatriot of Colonna, conversing with me yesterday, said:—"Of course, the affair is not an amore tremenda e cocente," nor is it merely a marriage of convenience. Being both young, their tastes and habits are compatible and, barring accidents, they will be happy.

I heard rather a pretty story yesterday apropos of the Markay-Colonna affair, which (gardon the hackneyed expression) "Le non e ero, e ben trovato."

Last winter in Rome—so runs the story—the count escorted Miss Mackey to the Colonna palazzo, on the Piazza del Santi Apostoli, to show her the family portrait gallery. Passing along the corridor the prince would now and then halt, making explanatory remarks in regard to the history of his ancestors, dwelling with pride upon the story of Cardinal Colonna whom Petrarch venerated, of the great admiral who performed prodigies of valor on the momentous day of Lepanto, and longest of all upon the sad story of sweet, dark-eyed Victoria Colonna, who loved and built "the lofty rhymo."

Reaching the end of the gallery Miss Mackay said, with an arch smile, to her companion, pointing to a vacant space on the walls:

"Principe, when time roils on and your partrait is hung there, how will men speak of you to distinguish you from the other Colonna who was haivey in being Miss Mack-Colonnas ?"

"If they merely say, "This is the principe Colonna who was happy in being Miss Mackay's adoring slave' I will be more than content."

"Non brame altra esca."

A GERMAN BARON'S HEIR.

A Little Romance that Links Two Lands—A Young Philadelphian's Fortune. An interesting case has been uncovered in the orphans' court of Philadelphia, by the issuance, at the instance of Charles F. Herbert, of a commission to Germany to get testimony as to the birth, marriage, and death of his mother, Adelina Herbert, the daughter of Baron Von Bunsen, of Oberwessel, near Co blentz. The petition sets out that Mrs. Herbert died November 15, 1882, leaving an estate valued at $1,100 that is still to be settled up. Mr. Herbert was, in 1859, living at her father's "schloss" or castle near Oberwessel. She was then about eighteen, blue fair-haired, bright-minded and highly educated. Her father kept her almost in seclusion, she having been betrothed, when a child, to the son of a wealthy German land-owner of rank. Following the dictates of her heart she, however, married Charles Edgar Herbert, the son of a at one time edgar Herbert, the son of a at one time well-kown dry goods merchant of Philadelphia, who was at the time touring in Germany, and the marriage was only consummated after the efforts of the Baron to regain and control his daughter had failed. The young couple came to Philadelphia and shortly after, the young husband entered the army and was killed at Antietam. The wife obtained a pension, and her son, the present petitioner, obtained employment in the Pennsylvania railroad office; and is now the agent for a mercantile house. His mother died without making a will, and the little property that she had gathered together in the course of years was put into the hands of Henry R. Peters, an administrator, to be settled. About six weeks ago the administrator received a notice from the Obermeister of Obercessel informing him the Baren Ven tor received a notice from the Obermeister of Oberwessel informing him that Baron Von Bunsen had died, and that by his will, made seven years ago, he left 60,000 marks to Ade-lina Herbert, formerly Adelina Von Bunsen. "once," as he said, "my daughter." The legatee being dead the money goes to her estate, to which, under the haw, the petitioner is the only heir. By the proceedings now undertaken the heir, counsel says, can establish his claim with ease, certainty, and discrete.

The Loss of a Husband. From the New York Sun.

Young Lady (just returned from attending a funeral)-Such a crowd as there was at the house, mamma! And flowers! Why, the pariors were filled with them. It was plain that no expense had been spared. And plain that no expense had been spared. And poor, dear Mrs. B., in her rich deep mourning, looked so heartbroken and superb.

Mamma—Was she very much overcome? Young Lady—Not apparently. Mrs. B., is too well bred to display emotion. But the richness of her toilet surpassed anything I have ever seen. Her grief was subdued, but magnificent.

His Wedding Present.
"There, my daughter," said the old man, placing a deed for a beautiful mansion among the wedding gifts, "is my present, and my best wishes for your future happiness go with it. God bless you, my child; God bless you!" and he turned away, choked with emotion.

"Is there a mortgage on it, papa?" she asked brightly, as she arranged the deed conspicuously on the table.

"No," he said, "there is no mortgage on the deed; it's on the property.

How He Was Cured.

John B. Gough'in his youth was very wild and dissipated. He was fondly attached to a young lady who lived in Vermont. She re-fused to marry him on account of his disso-lute habits, and gave her hand to a promising lawyer in her native village. Gough relawyer in her native village. Gough re-formed, and he became a celebrated temper-ance advocate. The lady's husband went to the war, where he acquired the vice of drinking. He came home, reformed and fell, reformed an fell again, and finally died, a complete wreck, the victim of whisky.

She Wanted a New Nose. According to the Philadelphia Medical and Surgical Journal, a girl who would have heen a beauty save for a Roman nose of undesirable prominence called upon a surgeon to transform the organ into a graceful Grecian article. The surgeon declined to operate for such a purpose, but the girl said she would "find a man to do it if it cost her $3,000.

No woman can be worse for possessing brains. The hue and cry set up against higher education, examinations and new openings for woman's work has a hollow ring about it. Men have a sneaking suspicion that they are not so intellectually superior as they have been led to suppose. Uncon-sciously to themselves, they are afraid of being found out; or else, perhaps, they are lazy, and are fearful of being stirred up. womanliness, does not consist in intellectuality. The first thing in which it does consist is self respect.
