LANCASTER, JANUARY 22, 1885.

The New Orleans Exposition.

The New Orleans Exposition seems to have been born prematurely. Its projectors failed to foresee its natural time of gestation. If they had postponed it a year they would have been wiser. Inasmuch as it would be essentially a winter exhibition in the climate in which it was to be held, it needed to be ready promptly at the time advertised; but it has been much more delayed than was the Centennial Exposition in its full completion. That was very laggard and the hot summer came upon it before it was really ready in all its parts; so that the few months of the autumn were those only which were available for visitors who desired to see all its wonders in a comfortable temperature; and then the crowd was such as to take away much from the satisfaction of visitors.

The New Orleans Exposition does not seem to be troubled as yet by the numbers of those who flock to it; and the reports of its incompleteness are not likely to cause a rush to it. This is the season at which the crowd should be the greatest. By early summer the heat will be too great, and the appointed time for closing it will have come. Its managers have not learned a sufficient lesson from the troubles attending the filling up of the Centennial show; else they would have postponed their opening until next winter.

There is something now said of shutting the exposition up over next summer and re-opening it in the autumn. It will be wisely done if the exhibitors can be persuaded to the scheme. The possibility of such postponement is likely to still further retard the present flow of visitors.

The great states of the North seem to have looked upon the show with languid interest; neither New York nor Pennsylvania have done much towards providing the exhibits of their state. The ten thousand dollars which Pennsylvania now proposes to expend is apparently an inadequate provision for the work; and if the exposition is not to be continued beyond the spring, the time is too short to enable the state to make a creditable showing; without this, it had better have none. Something should be understood definitely about the duration of the exposition before the state makes its appropriation for its representation in it.

"Dear Beaver, Don't Write."

Gen. Beaver is beginning to earn the reputation of the ready letter writer. He manifests a habit that has often proved fatal to abler public men. The best advice he ever got was the memorable message of Quay: "Dear Beaver, don't talk." He has some reputation as an orator. His tongue and his pen may yet get him into trouble.

It seems that when the Independents or anti-Cameronites, at Harrisburg, wanted to put him up as their candidate for senator, one of them wrote to him and received an answer which was construed to indicate his entire willingness to stand and his gratification over any support he might receive. Then there was a visit paid to him by some mysterious pilgrim of the other wing of the party, and the mission resulted in another letter from Beaver peremptorily declining to let his name be used against Cameron's. This was intended and was used to offset the first. Now, since the election is over, Beaver writes to one of his supporters saying that "he heard with pleasure the action of my friends in the caucus. It was perhaps, just as well to have a division in the vote, and the result may tend to harmony hereafter."

It looks as though Beaver was trying to carry water on both shoulders. It is dangerous exercise. The Stalwarts have no use for him unless he is of them and with them, and will do their bidding. If he "hears with pleasure" of the action of his friends in opposition to Cameron he may be assured that he will be dropped from the Cameron slate. They have a silent man in reserve, whose chief gift is his power to hold his tongue, who has served them in the past and on whom they would be glad to swap Beaver if an opportunity opens.

Overriding the Law.

The Senate of Pennsylvania—or rather its Republican members, save and excepting Mr. Aguew—overruling the lieutenant governor, decided yesterday that a bill increasing the number of police magistrates in Philadelphia, affecting that city only and naming it particularly as the sole jurisdiction interested, was not a "local or special" bill, such as the constitution directs shall have been advertised "in the locality where the matter or thing to be affected may be situated." The bill in question did not even evade the constitutional requirement by the "cities-of-the-first-class-device," which the supreme court has decided will pass muster.

Of course such a decision by the partisan majority of the senators was made for a partisan exigency.

In the argument of the point it was cited that all the laws creating additional judgeships in different counties from time to time, had been enacted without such local advertising. If so such legislation has been in gross and manifest neglect of the constitutional direction and it is marvellous that the omission should so long have escaped notice and objection. The slovenly methods of passing bills in the state legislature was one of the great abuses which the new constitution aimed to check. The prescribed modes cannot be too strongly insisted upon. Hasty legislation is generally bad legislation; and it is astonishing with what speed a measure is sometimes put through after the long existing constitutional necessity for it has been overlooked for years.

All Quiet Along the Lines.

The Democracy of Pennsylvania will no doubt be glad of the reassurance furnished by the proceedings of their state committee that there are no factions in the party in this state. An unusual degree of harmony prevailed at the very numerous gathering, and its conclusions were reached with almost entire unanimity.

One or two zealous gentlemen insisted that there are two factions in the party in Pennsylvania, but the rest of the committee did not seem to have heard of them.

George Elliot tells of an ambitious rooster who thought the sun rose on purpose to hear him crow.

Cui Bono?

The question is being raised of what use is the attorney general of the United States, seeing that in the most important duty entrusted to that functionary for many years—prosecution of Star Route thieves—the astute criminal lawyer now at the head of the department of justice has so signally failed.

The truth is that the uselessness of the office of late results from the failure of an efficient administration of it.

A new Democratic attorney general may be confidently expected to prove the utility of this office. He can do much in the way of helping to turn the rascals out.

THE Republican office-holder thinks these are very cold days.

IT is somewhat remarkable that any body of intelligent women would seriously enter upon the discussion and denunciation of those who affirm that woman was an afterthought in creation, that her sex is a misfortune, that marriage is a condition of subordination and maternity a curse. Such propositions must fall of their own weight. Yet we find the National Women's Suffrage association lashing itself into fury over these same alleged charges against the fair. Those who would make them deserve all the rigors of lynch law. De Quincey once said: "Man owes half his happiness and all his pleasures to woman's companionship," and the vast majority of mankind are inclined to believe that he was tuning on the right key when he said it.

AT the Metemneh battle two lords and nine officers were killed out of a total of seventy-four. Perhaps there are no privates in the English army.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL, feeling that the time of his departure from the court of St. James is not very far distant, concludes that he might as well enjoy the luxury of expressing himself freely on the great political-economic question of the day. He presided the other night at a meeting of the London Society of Arts in which he took occasion to say that free trade would enable America soon to equal England's mercantile marine, which had heretofore been impossible through the operation of the American navigation law and tariff. A similar deliverance about the time of his contemplated nomination for minister to England would have very effectually quenched him. It can now do him no harm, for he will have returned to the dust whence he came years before the Republican party will be in a position to reward anyone.

THE church-going people of Lebanon have adopted "mum receptions" as a means for raising funds for their church. It is a great improvement on strawberry festivals, where the strawberries are like angels' visits, oyster suppers where occasionally may be discovered a stray oyster swimming around in a sea of soup, or a church fair where benevolent males are given no change whenever they make a purchase. The new device for helping the heathens of Boorjobhoola Gha has some unique features. All entering the room are expected to maintain perfect silence. The first who speaks will be fined 50 cents. Each succeeding speaker will be subject to a fine of 25 cents, and will be entitled to a bulge, a ticket for refreshments, and the privilege of talking and making others talk. No writing allowed. Those who refrain from talking the entire evening will have their refreshments gratis. "Detectives" are expected to see that these rules are strictly observed. The severe restriction to keep the mouth closed which the nature of this amusement demands will keep it from ever becoming popular.

PERSONAL.

REV. DR. WILLIAM CLARK, of Amherst, Mass., is one of the four survivors of Dartmouth's class of 1822, containing forty-five men. The others are A. L. Kelly, of Winterport, Me., and M. Lowell, of Cohutt, Mass., lawyers, and the Rev. Dr. John Sessions, of Oakland, Cal.

VERNON LEE is said to have introduced in her lately published novel, "Miss Brown," many real persons. Hamlin, the hero, presents a portrait of Dante Gabriel Rosetti, while "Dennistoun" represents Mr. Swinburne. Oscar Wilde and other Londoners are easily recognizable.

PRINCESS BEATRICE gets the prize husband for looks. Prince Henry is undeniably handsome. The marriage is to take place early in May. It is not to be an elaborate ceremony of show and state, but will be celebrated as quietly as possible in the private chapel at Windsor Castle.

LORD GARMOYLE is a tall, punk-headed and effeminate looking man of about six and twenty. His chin recedes from under a rather large mouth, which is fringed with a plain little brown mustache, guiltless of either wax or curl. He is built on the most approved dude model. He is now sojourning in New York.

MOTHER M. THERESA, one of the sisters of mercy of the convent of St. Mary's parish, Wilkesbarre, died Wednesday morning after a lingering illness. Her secular name was Annie Walker. She was a daughter of Maj. R. J. Walker, U. S. A., and Eliza Blaine, sister of James G. Blaine, and was born in Brownsville, Pa., in 1848.

DR. HOLMES'S "Emerson" has been received with enthusiasm in England. "The London Telegraph" says that "it is certain that Mr. John Morley and the able contributors whom he has enlisted to write the lives of 'English Men of Letters,' will have to bestir themselves if many such books should appear upon the other side of the Atlantic."

LOUISE MICHEL has, like Prince Krapotkin, been beguiling the monotony of captivity with literary pursuits. A little volume of hers has just been given to the world. It is of a most inoffensive character, the prison regulations not affording her, it may be, facilities for airing her anarchial crochets. Louise has devoted her leisure to a study of the songs and stories of an Indian tribe, and the title of her book is "Legendes et Chants de Geste des Canaques." The book is written in a pure and simple style, and is a creditable literary performance.

HON. HANNIBAL HAMLIN relates that he enjoyed and profited by his brief newspaper experience. "When Horatio King and I," he says, bought the Jeffersonian at Paris, Me., we were under twenty-one years of age. I remained in partnership with him six months, and worked for him six months more. I set type and helped him work off the paper on the old hand press. We had to spread the ink on with balls made of buckskin. It was very laborious. I sold out my share of the Jeffersonian for $400. I made a very good speculation, and the money, I know, helped me materially in my law studies."

EDWIN ARNOLD has the following affectionate introduction to his forthcoming book:

You ask me, dear! what perfect thing
I find in all my wandering
These ancient Sanskrit scrolls amid,
Where India's deepest heart is hid.
Nothing, I answer, half so wise
As one glance from your gentle eyes!
Nothing so tender or so true
As one word interchanged with you!
Because two souls conjoined can see
More than the best philosophy.
Yet, wise and true and tender lore
Waits him who will those leaves explore,
Which, plucked from palm or plantain tree,
Display, in Devanagari,
The grand, sonorous, long-linked lines,
Where through that "Light of Asia" shines.

PENNSYLVANIA AT NEW ORLEANS.

What the Keystone State Will Exhibit at the Southern Exposition.

R. H. Thomas, acting commissioner for Pennsylvania, sends the following list of exhibits that will be made by the state at New Orleans:

Pennsylvania's exhibit consists of all varieties of cereals, in quantities of two quarts each, collected from forty counties of the state, and comprising about 300 samples, attractively put up in jars of clear glass; every variety of apples raised in the state, potatoes and other vegetables cultivated by our farmers and gardeners, different varieties of grasses, grain in the head, specimens of all the different kinds of wood; mineral and geological specimens from the counties of Berks, Lebanon, Chester, Montgomery, Lancaster, Dauphin, York, Cumberland, Franklin, Perry and several other localities within the limit of the state; coal, coke and oil from the western counties; a magnificent display of coal, coke and iron, contributed by Robert Hare Powel's Sons & Co., of Powelton, with samples of coal from the anthracite region. Large photographs of interesting scenery on the lines of the Pennsylvania, Lehigh Valley, Cumberland Valley, Gettysburg and Harrisburg and other important railroads; choice collections of table glassware from many of the Pittsburg factories; drawing and geological specimens from the interesting points of the Gettysburg battle field; paintings, photographs and drawings, of noted public buildings and prominent men; a handsome display from the Northern home and soldiers' orphan schools, secured through the influences of Mrs. Elizabeth Hunter, of Philadelphia; collections of tobacco from the crop of 1882, 1883 and 1884, grown in the counties of Lancaster, Dauphin, York and Cumberland; an interesting exhibition from the Indian industrial school at Carlisle, and, as the country sale bill says, "other articles too numerous to mention."

The Philadelphia municipal exhibit, to be placed in good position in the state department, will be, thanks to Mr. Charles A. Alexander, of centennial fame, very fine, though not as large as it should be. This exhibit will include paintings, photographs and drawings of public buildings; contributions from the school of design; girls' industrial school, deaf and dumb asylum and other sources.

The Pennsylvania mineral exhibit is well worthy the state whose prosperity is based on its great resources. In coal there is a mass of anthracite, weighing 8235 lbs, and containing 31 8-10 cubic feet, exhibited by the directors of the Girard trust. Robert Hare Powel & Co., exhibit a very fine lot of specimens of coal, coke and iron ores, from their very extensive estates. Iron ore from nearly all the counties in the state are shown by various parties.

The most beautiful crystals of copper sulphide ever found on this continent are exhibited by A. E. Foote, from the famous copper and iron mines at French Creek Falls, in Chester county. Fine malachites, both fibrous and botryoidal, rough and polished, are shown from Berks and other counties. Native copper, red and black oxide and sulphorits, are shown from Cornwall and other localities. Corundum and its associations are shown both massive and in fine crystals from several counties. The interesting garnets that are now being mined so largely for polishing purposes in Chester county are shown in large red masses. Beautiful crystals, the finest found on the continent, are shown from Delaware county.

The famous phosphates, sulphates and carbonates of lead, from the Wheatley mines near Phœnixville, are shown in specimens of extraordinary value, and also galena, some of it highly argentiferous, from these and many other mines in the states.

Chromian ore and the very beautiful minerals associated are shown from Texas, Lancaster county, Pa. The very interesting mineral Brucite, a hydrate of magnesia, named after the oldest of American Mineralogists, is shown in better specimens than are found anywhere else in the world. Magnesite, from which the delightful medicine Epsom salts is manufactured, is shown from several counties. From the Texas mines also comes Genthite Emerald Nickel, Hydromagnesite, Hydrodolmite Baltimorite, Pierolite and the lovely ornamental variety of Serpentine called Williamsite.

Iron nickel, the Millerite, from the famous Gap mines, Pa., that now supply nearly all the nickel used in this country is shown. These pure masses of the sulphide are unequalled anywhere in the world, but most of the nickel at the Gap mine is obtained from the pyrrhotite, which is also shown.

Fieldspar, so extensively mined for pottery and porcelain manufacture, and quartz used in glass making, &c., are shown from many counties. Gigantic crystals of the orthoclase are shown from Delaware county. The rare form known as Chesterlite, peculiar to the neighborhood of West Chester, is shown in fine cleavages. Amazon stone, moss agate, and sun stone, used in jewelry, are shown in finer specimens than can be found anywhere else on the continent.

An enormous smoky quartz crystal is shown from Delaware county, also some of finest amethysts that have ever been found at any locality.

Beryl, aquamarines and many other of the rare minerals that have made Pennsylvania so celebrated among mineralogists, are all well represented.

From Philadelphia are shown Kandite, Molybdenite, Tourmalines, &c., and from other parts of the state, Dendyite, Jeffersite, Vermiculete, &c.

ALLEGED FEMALE ARTISTS.

How They Manage to Shove Their Cheap Wares on Congress.

Washington Cor. of New York World.

There is hardly ever any picture offered to Congress below a price which would buy a master-piece by one of the best men in Europe. The perfectly hideous monstrosity upon the Senate side of the Capitol, known as "Perry's Victory," cost the government $20,000. The little artist, Powell, who got this great sum for a picture which could not have been sold for any price in the markets of the world, afterwards came back to Congress and got $5,000 more upon the plea that he had incurred extraordinary expenses in Germany in working up the picture, and that this sum was necessary to save him from actual want. And good, generous Congress gave him the money.

Women have been quite successful in selling alleged works of art to Congress, but there are limits beyond which even congressmen will not go. The two pictures now being considered by the library committee—that of the electoral commission, by Mrs. Fassett, and the portrait of Gen. Thomas by Miss Ransom—will hardly be purchased. The Gen. Thomas picture is a veteran. It has been before Congress now for at least ten years. Neither of the pictures has any artistic merit and their only claim upon the meagre attention that has been given them lies in the fact that the ladies who painted them are poor and deserving.

There is no woman who has gotten so much out of Congress as Vinnie Ream, now Mrs. Hoxie. She never had any artistic training. She never condescended to go through any form of routine study. She is as much of an artist as a musician would be who plays entirely by ear. Yet she has gotten out of Congress upward of $30,000 at different times for alleged works of art. Congress never called in expert opinion in passing upon any work of art offered them. When Congress some years ago directed that money should be appropriated to build a statue of Admiral Farragut, the competition for the designing of the statue was thrown open to the world. The commission appointed to examine the merits of the models submitted were General Sherman who knows no more about art than an army mule; Lieut. Hoxie, an army engineer, equally ignorant, and Mrs. Farragut. Vinnie Ream, of course, won the vote of Gen. Sherman at once. She was the only woman among the competitors. The general looked at her and not at the models and gave her his vote out of gallantry. Lieut. Hoxie fell in love with her, proposed and was accepted and thus became an interested party to her securing the contract, although this was not known until after the award was made. Mrs Farragut was pleased by the fact that the likeness of the admiral was good. It is to this gifted beard that we owe to-day the caricature of the gallant old admiral which stands in Farragut square, and which is known throughout the town as the Big Policeman.

It will be idle to expect Congress to improve very much in the character of its art purchases until there shall be a wider knowledge and appreciation of art among public men. It would be too much to expect them to become competent judges of what is good within any very short space of time. But it is reasonable to suppose that the time is not very far distant when Congress will be at least disposed to first seek the opinion of experts before proceeding to the expenditure of any money in this direction.

Bank Cashier Absconds with Its Cash.

S. Ross Martin, cashier of the Jamestown, Pa., savings bank, in whom the community had implicit confidence, absconded on Monday evening with all the available cash and departed for parts unknown. On Tuesday morning when the teller opened the bank he found it destitute of cash and other available assets. The stockholders and depositors are responsible farmers in this vicinity, and the feeling is intense. The bank will go into the hands of a receiver, and the liabilities will not be known until after an examination, but it is believed they are $80,000. The assets amount to nothing but the fixtures and furniture.

State Editorial Association.

The State Editorial association met in Harrisburg, on Wednesday, and elected the following officers by acclamation: President, James H. Lambert, of the Philadelphia Times; vice presidents, R. F. Meyers, Lucius Rogers, and W. A. Kindler; secretary and treasurer, R. H. Thomas, of Mechanicsburg; corresponding secretary, H. C. Dorn, of Altoona; executive committee, A. M. Randle, Samuel A. Smith, H. J. Stahle, R. S. Menamin, John A. Magee, A. J. Hughes and H. S. Taggart. The executive committee will select the place for the summer excursion.

Thief Shot by a Woman.

Mrs. Magoffin, a widow, living two miles south of Green's Store, Ky., hearing a noise in her barn Tuesday night, shot a person whom she saw moving near the door. It proved to be Asher Johnson, colored, a notorious horse thief. The man was dead when a light was brought. Mrs. Magoffin was not arrested.

Beautiful Hands.

A good deal of interest is now shown in beautifying hands, fingers and nails. Beauty for the human hand in its beauty is an object worthy of admiration. But do the ladies know that true beauty of hands cannot exist if the stomach and digestive apparatus are not in good health? To make digestion good, circulation natural, blood rich and skin clear, take Brown's Iron Bitters. Mrs. J. W. Ellis, Minburn, Iowa, had suffered for several years from debility, but was now restored to health by this prince of tonics.

EMINENT MEDICAL TESTIMONY.

New York, March 25th, 1882.

I have used ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS in my practice with remarkable success, and found them peculiarly efficacious when applied to the back for Weak Spine and Nervous Exhaustion; they afford almost instant relief in Coughs, Colds and Liver Complaint. I cordially recommend them as the best and safest Plaster ever made, and would caution the public against the numerous other so-called Porous Plasters that are sought to be palmed off on a credulous public; they are worthless and oftentimes dangerous.

HAVING DISSOLVED PARTNERSHIP and permanently closed the Chestnut Street Iron Works, I desire to inform my old patrons and the public generally, that I am still in the business, being located in the Penn Iron Company's Works, North Plum street, where I am making Iron and Brass Castings of every description, and will be pleased to serve all who may favor me with their patronage. From 40 years experience in the business and using the best material and employing the best mechanics, I am satisfied I can guarantee entire satisfaction. Castings made from a mixture of iron and steel which are more reliable for strength and durability than the best cast iron known. V teeth roll pinions, rolls and rolling mill work a specialty. Castings made of very soft iron, and brass castings of every description. I have all the patterns of the well and favorably known Mowrer Corn and Cob Crusher, refitted and improved, also on hand. Mills completely fitted up or in parts, to replace old ones which have been in use for years, guaranteeing them to give satisfaction.
