The Forfeited Land Grant.

The United States Senate has at last consented to forfeit the Texas Pacific land grant. When it came to the plunge it took it with great unanimity, only two members voting against it. It has been evident from the delay in reaching the final vote that the Senate was not enthusiastic over the measure. The influence of railroad corporations and magnates seems to be much stronger in the Senate than in the House; perhaps it only seems to be so, and the Senate's slowness proceeds from its natural conservatism; yet it would appear that no great opportunity for hesitation is afforded over the question as to whether land grants that have lapsed by the failure of railroad companies to use them, should be declared forfeited. It may have been "conservatism" in the supreme court, which caused it to decide that a land grant, whose conditions had not been obeyed, needed to be forfeited by act of Congress; or it may have been the same soft feeling for the corporations of which the Senate is composed.

This Texas Pacific grant had no merit in it whatever. The company to which it was given never built the road through the granted lands. The Southern Pacific, which was built through them, was built without a land grant, and it was only after it had occupied the ground on which the Texas Pacific proposed to lay its line that the latter company, which had passed from Scott's hands to Gould's, entered into a combination with it in which it sought to transfer its land grant, that the time for securing which had already elapsed, to the Southern Pacific road. The dickerings and juggling by which the scheme was sought to be promoted in Congress, have been graphically told in the Huntington letters, the publication of which has been one of the greatest boons the country has had. It so uncovers the traces of the serpent that Congress could not fail to see and put its foot upon it. It is well that the job is done, however late and reluctantly.

At the Dinner Table.
 There is a good deal in the newspapers nowadays about elaborate dinners; and from the description printed of the flowers and the glass, the china and the upholstery that furnish the banquet boards, it might be judged that the feasts of Lucullus and the famous festivals of the ancients had no such splendors as are in the modern dining rooms of Philadelphia and Washington.

Social entertainment is a fine art. A dinner may be made the occasion for a display of the highest refinement. In the arrangement of the tables, the choice of the menu and the selection of wines, there is opportunity to exercise great taste, intellectual accomplishments and a nice artistic sense. When the aim is to minister to the sensual appetite and to gratify a barbaric desire for display, the dinner becomes only an affair for the long purse and the most vulgar taste; perhaps give the biggest and best dinner.

Ten in many of the modern dinners are simply affairs of this kind. The host pays for them and that is all there is of him about them; he might as well bestow upon each guest the cost of his or her share of it and let them spend it to their liking.

For instance, being talkative is wanting. It is brought overshadowed by the other features of "the feed." The conversation runs solely to the excellence of the viands and the age of the wines. They are not regarded as simply incidental to the feast of reason and flow of soul. The costliness of the affair suppresses every sort of enthusiasm but that of admiration for the wealth and of liberality of the host.

The reaction will only come when the sumptuousness and elaboration of the present fashionable dinner gives way to plainer forms.

A young man sat down at dinner the other day with a gentleman worth a million dollars, who had been in public life for half a century, who had counseled with presidents and had dined with kings. They had beefsteak, boiled potatoes, milk and pie. The next day he was invited to dine with Solomon Shoddy, who in his rise from the position of scullion to one of opulence, had learned nothing; there were thirteen courses and nine kinds of wine, the best that money could buy.

And yet the little dinner was the best, even for a guest who knew not dyspepsia and had no dread of indigestion.

Gladstone's Position.

Mr. Gladstone is coming in for his share of abuse—and for more than his share—for the disasters which have attended the English aim in Egypt. He is realizing in the popular feeling toward his government just now that, whereas nothing succeeds like success, nothing fails like failure. He who was but yesterday the idol of the people and whose governmental policy and administrative skill were lauded to the skies, is to-day an object of intense dissatisfaction; and it is tolerably certain that were the government to go before the country now in Parliamentary elections it would meet with disastrous reverses if not with utter political overthrow.

A clever comic pictorial recently represented Mr. Gladstone's long-time antagonist, Diamond, looking down by a stretch of charity, perhaps—very comically upon the embarrassment of domestic and foreign troubles, which beset the government. If Deaconsfield were alive he would most certainly find in the present complicated situation of England rare opportunities for the display of his unique and dazzling powers; and he would undoubtedly trick the populace with his characteristic artifices into new enthusiasm for his imperial policy of foreign wars and distant conquest.

No temporary disasters, such as have befallen the power of Great Britain in the Sudan, or the violent outbreaks of Irish discontent at home can alter the history of fifty years, or change the verdict which it has written. The pacific policy of Mr. Gladstone; his humanity for Arab and Irish; his liberal views and lofty Christian statesmanship are in accord with the real genius of England and the civilization of the century. In the end they will triumph; and no cloud can obscure his pre-eminence among Englishmen nor long dim the lustre of his fame before the whole world, which has none greater in his day and generation.

Childish Wrangling.

A Washington dispatch says that Mr. Randall and Mr. Hewitt, who are not personal friends, had a dispute on the floor of the House, during which, after Mr. Hewitt had said that he held Mr. Randall's committee in the highest esteem, Mr. Randall replied that he could not say that the feeling was mutual. We refer to the matter simply to say that in our judgment such encounters are very unworthy of distinguished Democrats on the floor of the House, and that they should be conspicuously absent. The retort of Mr. Randall was not happy. His committee could not avoid holding Mr. Hewitt in high esteem, because he is worthy of it; just as Mr. Randall is. The country holds them both in high esteem; but the esteem will be much greater if they will abstain from exhibiting in public signs of anger which children only are excusable for showing.

The British lion is thoroughly awake; and if El Mahdi is present, he will promptly seek cover.

STREET SPRINKLING seems a rather unnecessary subject to discuss with the ground frozen, but in time of sunshine it is a prudent man who prepares for rain. On the efficient laying of dust in cities by street sprinkling has of late credit as a cleanly way to keep the streets clean, and will have with joy the advent of winter will tend to lay the dust, which she esteems her worst enemy. Whether it is proper for a city to take hold of street sprinkling on its own hook, or to let it go by default is a question. In Brooklyn the men who sprinkle the streets pay the city a charge for each 100 gallons of water used, and leave the occupant of a building $1 a month for distributing it in front of his building. This worked well enough until the politician began to take hold of the privileges for street sprinkling. A political setup made, the contract awarded to a party favorite, lower bidders are frozen out, and the property holder must either pay the price demanded, sprinkle the streets before his own door, or uncomplainingly swallow the dust. Better the latter alternative, however, than this simple department of the city should fall into the hands of unscrupulous politicians.

It would be a red-headed appointment that deprived Delaware county of its senator.

It is rather a novel scheme for rent-paying that is proposed by the Dublin organ of the Irish Nationalists, United Ireland. It provides that the tenants shall unite in order to determine for themselves what would be a fair yearly rent for the individual holdings. The plan provides for the appointment of trustees who will receive the whole rent from the individual tenants, and to whom they will pay the rent for the land when they demand settlement. Ireland would be a very pleasant place in which to own property if this order of things should be carried out. The owner is placed in the position of the poor relation who, on his rich relative dying, should be thankful that he is remembered at all. The plan can never be acceptable to self-respecting landlords. Ireland's only remedy seems to be the ownership of the lands by the tenantry, and legislative enactments that purchase land is for the best interests of the Emerald Isle.

The woman with the brittle bones is again traveling in the newspapers; it is little wonder that she sustains many fractures.

In one of the Chicago courts recently the jury in a certain case were unable to agree upon the amount of damages to be awarded, eight being in favor of a verdict of one hundred dollars, while four thought fifty sufficient. They decided to settle the matter by tossing up a penny, the winning side to have the awarding of the verdict. The penny was tossed, and the side favoring the $100 verdict winning, that sum was awarded. The judge learning of the manner in which the verdict was arrived at, promptly set it aside. The jury could have saved time and gained credit for ingenuity at the same time by flipping up the coin before entering the jury-box.

MARY ANDERSON dislikes "vulgar staring"; but that is one of the penalties of fame, dear girl.

PERSONAL.

BARON VON SCHLEINITZ, the German statesman, formerly Prussian minister of foreign affairs, is in this city.

MR. AUSTIN, the United States minister to Italy, had an interview with King Humbert yesterday, and presented his letters of recall.

JUDGE P. M. JANNEY, of Minneapolis, Minn., is in the city, spending a short time with friends. He is on his way to Cleveland's inauguration.

DR. WILLIAM DONALD, aged 27 years, was the youngest of the steamer State of Nebraska, died on Wednesday night at New York, from an overdose of opium taken by mistake.

FRANCIS MULLERS, of Erie, has condemned roller skating tracks and pastors of Catholic churches have notified their flocks that in future the sacrament will be denied those visiting these places.

COLONEL HERNARY many years ago passed as the strongest man in England, and used to twist a poker round his neck and carry poles up stairs. Then he had an illness, and subsequent to this he never renewed these feats.

W. W. STORY, the sculptor, has three children now growing to maturity of talent, Edith Story (Miss Perry) has just translated an Indian work; Waldor Story is a sculptor, and Julian Story a painter—both of them young men of promising parts.

JOSEPHIAN J. WRIGHT, associate justice of the supreme court of South Carolina from 1870 to 1871, and the only colored man who ever held that office in the state, died on Thursday at Charleston, aged 44 years. Mr. Wright was a native of Pennsylvania.

HERE AND THERE.

Talk about tobogganing in Canada! The Spring Garden boys and girls had a slide on North Mulberry street, beginning at Lemon, and ending at Walnut. They went with the greatest ease half way into the second square and as they shot past the pedestrian on their sleds, as long as a fence rail, it stirred a fever in the blood of age to see the exhilarating sport.

Every time I read of a policeman shooting at a man who is running away from arrest I wonder by what warrant of law the officer takes such chances of committing a homicide. Possibly he has a right to shoot, but to use his gun as a lever to resist or repulse a man legally arrested or to prevent or resist the flight of a man already under arrest; but that he is privileged to shoot at or shoot down a man who runs away from him before he has been arrested in the first place, is a belief held by some of our times. A policeman too ready to draw his bludgeon and to fire his gun will find out that even suspects have rights that even blue coats and brass buttons are bound to respect.

Isiah W. Willison, one of the newspaper stories goes, is set down as the richest man in Philadelphia, his fortune being placed at $15,000,000. Willison is the man they mean. He lives out in Bucks county, goes to the Philadelphia daily to his business, and spends on himself in a whole year about twenty-four hours' income. He is an uncle of Mr. Willison, of the Lancaster firm of Willison & Foster.

The present winter of "The Philopie" has been one of the most successful seasons of that well-established social and literary organization. All the subjects treated have been comprehended under the general theme of "The Education of the People." The speaker of the House, and the ladies of their respective families, have appeared with a line of seventeen women taking after him, every woman wearing a train, and while the hold of the procession was shaking hands with the president the fall of it was hardly down the staircase.

The American Eagle.
 See the figure of this bird on the standard silver dollar. He spreads his wings and seems as if about to swoop with wild delight. Such a condition may well puzzle the people who have been used to chronic indignation by using the eagle as a figurehead on the national seal. The eagle is a bird of prey, and his wings are not spread to show his feathers, but to show his claws. He is a bird of prey, and his wings are not spread to show his feathers, but to show his claws.

An Old Year.
 This is going to be an old year. No political issue for a "Planned Rights" or "Reform" will help keep up the health and strength of the vast multitude whose faith is pinned on the social reform promises of a political party. The people of such will need a tonic to tone up the system, a tonic to work off the bad ideas, and a tonic to help them to move on. We will see how long it stands at the head of the list of failed remedies, and if it receives the laurels from all the best.

How a Man Feels When Buried Beneath the Snow.
 Fred. Cullman, who was buried longer than any of those rescued alive from the Alta snow-slide, was seen by an Associated Press correspondent from Salt Lake City on Wednesday. He says Albert Thomas, proprietor of the hotel, was out getting snow to melt for water, when he saw the slide, and when William Wirt was upon an important trial in the supreme court of Massachusetts he was introduced by Daniel Webster in a speech of great beauty. In rising to address the court he said: "I have a great pleasure and reason to regret the very kind introduction which he had just received; his friend, Mr. Cullman, had just been buried alive in a snow-slide which he could not return, for he could never meet that gentleman at any bar in the United States where his name and fame had not gone before him."

DEATH BY POISON.

Mrs. Webb Killed by Arsenic Administered by Some One Unknown.
 The corner of Philadelphia, on Thursday held an inquest in the case of Frederick Crisp, Jr., and his grandmother, Mrs. Catherine Webb, who died in their home under suspicious circumstances. The whole family were prostrated on January 13, after drinking tea. Mrs. Crisp and seven of her children recovered, but her eldest son, Frederick, and her mother, Mrs. Caroline Webb, died on Sunday night, January 23, within a short time of each other.

Professor John J. Reese made an analysis of the contents of the stomachs of the deceased. He testified before the coroner Tuesday that he was present in minute quantities. Indications of arsenic also appeared in other portions of the body. No poison was found, however, in the stomach of the son. The conclusion arrived at by Professor Reese was that if the arsenic was taken by the deceased person in tea, as seems to be supposed, it must have been introduced there after the tea was put to drink.

The inauguration ball was a grand and noble affair. The absence of free tickets to the Washington inauguration ball causes grief and waste among a good many patriotic and noble-hearted people. The free tickets issued by the United States government to the members of the House, and the ladies of their respective families, were in the hands of the press, and were interpreted with great liberality. At a President's reception given this winter, where a member of the House, and the ladies of their respective families, were invited, he appeared with a line of seventeen women taking after him, every woman wearing a train, and while the hold of the procession was shaking hands with the president the fall of it was hardly down the staircase.
