Shortly afterward the con-cierge heard the voice of a man crying, "Help, help!" "A l'assassin "" "Au se cours !" A body was heard failing with a e $3.000.000, and the total cost of the war is stimated at $200,000,000 ; the civil service esimate shows an increase of $260,000 in the police and secret service account, the direct eault of the dynamite explosions. When all these things are considered there is a fair ground for American felicitation on the heavy thud ; then came a sort of death rat-

Mielle then opened the door of his spartment, and with a pleasant smile, said : "My dear friend, I have just had a little family quarrel. We are all liable to such quarrels, and mine is now happily ended." The policeman was satisfied and rotired. Soon afterward Mine, Mielle ontered the room and sceing her husband covered with blood and his shirt torn to shreds, asked, "You devil, what have you been doing now ?" Mielle said, "A friend of mine came to see me and got drunk and tried to jump out of the window. To prevent a catastrophe I had to fight him. Hence the debris."

A long black trunk was also removed from his rooms at the same time. This happexed last April. On May 9 s sailor fished out of the Seine, near the statue of Henri Quatre, the upper part of a man's body, the vertebral column bearing marks of having been severed by a carpenter's saw. Next day another sailor discovered near the same place a man's head. Ten days after a pair of thighs, then a pair of feet and a pair of axis were found floating in the Seine, all these sections bearing the marks of hav-ing been separated by means of a saw. These magnents of the corpse, when put together, enabled the police to identify them as the re-mains of Lebon, the poultry merchant. Thow appears that Miello, while his wife was locked up in her bed room, had sawn the body of his victim into about twenty sec-tions and packed them into a long black trunk, which he threw into the Seine on April 23.

trunk, which he threw into the Seine on April 28. Mielle was discovered by gendarmes at Barsur-Aube. He plunged into the river and swam across to the other bank. The gendarmes did the same, but Mielle was a gred swimmer and distanced his pursuers. After an exciting two mile chass over fences and ditches he was finally captured. Lebon's watch, jewelry and money were found in Mielie's pocket. The trial brings to light details of such a tevolling and repugnant nature that it is impossible to narrate them. The trial ex-cites the greatest interest, and will probably last for three days.
