STANDARD CARRIAGE WORK.

AN ENGINEER'S STORY.

The hour was ten, the night was dark,
The fast express was late.
And if there is in railroad life
One thing I fiercely hate.
Tis finishing a run up like
An owl train or a freight.

The dear old engine shot ahead,
Though big the load she drew;
Regardless quite or cloud and night,
She shook berself and flew;
And, spite of grades and curves and cuts,
I drove the darling through.

I thought I knew the tricks and ways of every one-horse road
That crossed the track, and small respect
To any such I showed;
But whistled for the crossings, while
Our speed was scarcely slowed.

THE VENTER OF THE PERSON OF TH Just as we flew around a curve,
And darted through a cut,
I saw a sight that made me start
As if I feft a shot:
A freight train lay before us, like,
A wagon in a rut.

course the attenues Across the track its length was stretched, And not a wheel was stirred. While down the grade my hig machine Went flying like a bird: I pulled the rope, and worked the valves, But could not speak a word,

I did my best, but toward the freight We speeded like a flash. With not a hope but that we might Go through it with a dash, And I could only stand and stare And wait the coming crush.

A level head, a lightning brain, Oh, who can tell their worth? Above all values wealth can give, Or rank, or place, or birth; And such a head at such a time Outweighs the solid earth.

It wasn't mine—some other man's; A brakeman on the freight, Who saw na aiming at his train And coming for it straight; And when he got his work in, you May bet he didn't wait.

As quick as thought that fellow jumped And pulied accorpling pin. And thus be cut the train in two Just where the rails begin. And signalled to his engineer To go ahead like sin.

The engine puff-saut pants; the train Starts slowly like a small. And through a little space 1 sec Our line of shining rall; But when we sped across the space, My very beard turned pale.

The buffer of the rearmost ear
We tore away with ease;
But that was nothing; down 1 dropped,
And prayed upon my knees
That I might never know again
So very tight a squeeze.

A little matter? Had you stood Where I was standing then,
You might have said that it would test
The powers of tongue or pen
To well describe that brakeman's deed:
One of a million men.

THE ALBATROSS.

The Bird That Follows the South Sea Voyager For Good Luck or III. James S. Whitman in American.

If there was anything that gave a delightful relief to the monotony of our threemonths' sea voyage from Boston to Valparaiso it was the albatross. He is one of the sailor's nost constant visitors in the Southern seas. And what an imposing visitor, indeed! He first came to us as if shot from the clouds, and in a sudden we saw circling round us a great majestic bird, with a solemn-looking and heavy-beaked head of gray, a large white body charmingly balanced by dark-colored wings, that extended from tip to tip the length of one's outstretched hands or more, with a flight swift, easy and graceful above that of any other bird. Now again, we saw him gliding across the vessel's wake, and then sweeping in long, wave-like curves over the ocean as far as the eye could reach. Some of the sailors called him the "man-o'-war bird," and if this was to indicate his strength in moving through the air or battling with the winds, it was a most fitting epithet. As he flew he seemed to show no muscular exertion whatever. Hour after hour, day after day, with head and wings perfectly motionless, we saw him wheeling and gliding as if he had struck a bargain with the winds to earry him which way he liked. An inclination of the body, often till the pinions be-came almost vertical, acted like a rudder, and at the same time seemed to give him renewed impetus. And thus he went, sway-ing slowly first to this side then to that, his keen eye peering over the surface with a giance that threw contempt upon the other birds of tempest-loving kind.

It was during the month of Juty that our

It was during the month of July that our good little ship was fighting her way through the stormy waters about Cape Horn. The albatrosses had left their hiding grounds and were joining the groups of cape pigeons, stormy petrels, and other birds that were already keeping his company. These were alindeed a raychous lot. They would eat almost anything, but pork was a delicacy that they would risk their lives for. No sooner did a little morsel of the savory food, trailed from a book over the stern, eatch the eve of did a little morsel of the savory food, trailed from a hook over the stern, eatch the eye of the albatross, than he would hover wistfully over it, and then throwing out his webbed feet, which seemed to act like an anchor, he would suddenly drop down and take the fatal bite. Now and then, however, a wise old bird would take his position, with all the dignity of a swan, close by the bait, and glance at us and about him, as if he meant us to understand that "you can't fool nie." glance at us and about him, as if he meant us to understand that "you can't fool me." And thus he would sit until lost in sight. The first albatross we caught was a powerful bird of about eighteen pounds' weight. It took all a man's strength to pull him aboard, resisting, us he alid, with his huge wings, and defending himself with his formidable beak. When once upon deck, he was the clumsiest and most helpless creature inaginable. He had not space enough toget the necessary momentum to send him into the air. Even in the water, he had to run some distance along the surface, paddling with his distance along the surface, paddling with his feet and beating the air with his wings, be-fore he could rise. Our first mate, a darefeet and beating the air with his wings, before he could rise. Our first mate, a daredevil sort of fellow, had all along been panting to do some doughty deed. The albatross apparently gave him just the opportunity he wanted. We had got fairly out of Cape Horn weather, and were enjoying a day of comparative calm. The mate stood forward, a pistol in each hand, keenly watching the few birds that still circled about us.
He had gained a rare experience with the revolver, as a scont in the West, and had already proved his skill on board ship by breaking, in two successive shots, a string and bottle that hung by it from the end of the main-yard. No sooner did two birds cross the bows within pistol shot than two rapid reports were heard, and after a few moments had passed the mate was seen stringgling in the water with two wounded albatrosses some fifty yards distant. He returned triumphantly with his prizes, but bleeding and exhausted, and within an eli of making food for the sharks that put in an appearance just as he was being raised over the vessel's side.

We saw no more of the albatross after we had passed the thirtieth parallel of south latitude. He had followed us, like a faithful

We saw no more of the albatross after we had passed the thirtieth parallel of south latitude. He had followed us, like a faithful friend, for ten days or more, even many hundreds of miles from land, and was never seen off the wing except when feeding upon our galley-refuse, or resting at night all wrapped in sleep, and cradled by the friendly nursing of the winds and waves.

Farmers' Boys.
From the Germontovn Telegraph.
The question is often asked "How shall we make farmers of our boys?" A full and satisfactory answer to this question depends upon a variety of conditions. In the first place, very much depends upon the early impressions that the boy receives. If the rod is neld too closely above his back in his youthful days, so that he begins to feel the yoke of oppression, there will soon begin to develop a feeling of disgust that will continue to grow, outrooting love for home and its surroundings. While parental authority should be exercised properly, it should be with great prudence and with a view to the best good of the child. The first step should best good of the child. The first step should be to create in the young heart an intense love for home and its surroundings. Let this become so strong that it can find expression in thought, "There is no place like home." To accomplish this home must be something more than a mere name. It must have its social, its intellectual attractions, so strong that they overpower any desire to break away from its healthy influentiatione for the purpose of trying any of the unsatisfactory attractions of village or city life. He should be held at home in this way until he arrives at years discretion. Next, it is important, if he would be held upon the farm, to create in his heart an attachment to the work of the farm, and this cannot be done by making it burdensome, or as it has sometimes been expressed, do not bear too hard upon the grindstone. Let the boy feel that he occupies an important position as an assistant or even adviser, that his presence is necessary in the general management of necessary in the general management of affairs, that your interest is his interest, that when you are away he is to be the director of when you are away he is to be the director of affairs, and there will continue to grow up a strong attachment for the farm and its employments. Boys are not leaving the farms wholly from choice. Many are compelled to go, being literally driven away by the exercises of too rigid an adherence to the idea that a boy is simply an object for drudgery.

SPECIAL NOTICES. O, my back! That lame back is caused by kidney disease. Stop it at once by Hunt's [Hidney and Liver] Remedy.

Good news ought to be told; and it is good news that Hunt's Remedy has cured the worst of kidney diseases, and can do it again.

The Reputation of a Standard Article The Reputation of a Standard Article Is seldom injured by surreptitions rivalry. Imitators of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters have not only lost money by attempting underhand competition with it, but have neturally contributed to enhance the estimation in which the genuine medicine is held. The public at large has for many years been acquainted with the cur marks that distinguish the real from the spurious, and cannot be persuaded that other articles sold in a somewhat similar guise are equally good. Fever somewhat similar guise are equally good. Feyer and ague, constipation, dyspepsia and liver com-plaint are not curable by cheap local bitters, eye openers and tonies, but the fact is too well proven and too generally known to admit of conscientious dispute that for these and other naladies the great household medicine is a safe and thorough remedy. Not only in the United States, but in Mexico, South America and the West indies, its merits are widely recognized and its reputation too firmly established to be shaken. ntb 19d

Wintry Winds. Its all right for poets to sing the praises of the beautiful snow, and the merry sleigh bells, and the ringing skates on the glassy ice, but they can't fill the bill with the scort of stuff when one is sitting with his feet on a tub of hot water, his head done up in flannels, and with mustare plasters on both sides of his chest. What a per on needs then is a thorough dose of Kidne Wort to act as a cathartic, for nothing will so quickly relieve that congestive, feverish condition which comes of a hard cold. Often these colds cause bilious attacks, Jame backs, disordered kidneys, rheumatism, catarrh, etc. Kidney-Wort can be relied on to bring back a healthy condition.
