THE LANCASTER INTELLIGENCER. LANCASTER, MARCH 27, 1896.

The Likelihood of War. Preparations for a war with Russia are rapidly pressed, in England, and the impression they make is that the war is very likely to occur; yet, the demonstration of the fact that England is determined to fight, rather than to permit the further advance of Russia toward India, ought to have a strong tendency to prevent the threatened war.

It does not therefore seem to us that war is very probable notwithstanding the warlike talk of the cable. It is undeniable, however, that the people of this country, generally, would like to see the war take place, not from any malevolent feeling toward either party, but because they expect to reap a profit from it in increase of business and prices of commodities.

Communities seem to be governed by different rules from those which govern the people in them as individuals. Any man who would rejoice in the strife of individuals which gave him profit, would need to do it secretly to escape reprobation; but he may openly rejoice at a conflict between nations because it brings him profit, and not rebuked at all for it by the opinion of a public, each member of which is tarred with the same stick.

Underground and Overhead. There has been a good deal of constitutional law and scientific argument expounded before the legislative committees this winter upon the subject of underground telegraph, telephone and electric light wires. It is called out by the discussion of a bill which proposes to compel all companies using such wires in cities of over 10,000 population, to bury their wires between the date of the passage of the bill and next December 1st, which would likely be a period of six months.

Against the bill are argued its unconstitutionality, the old complaint of interfering with vested rights and taking private property without compensation, its impracticability, in that it would be a physical impossibility to lay the wires underground within the prescribed time, the inability to transmit messages under ground; and, finally, such enormous cost of the change that only the most powerful companies and monopolies could effect it and the business public would in the end suffer from it.

It should be very difficult for the legislature to make a clear enactment, that would do justice to the public and not do injustice to the corporations that now override it. There seems to be sense in the suggestions made yesterday by the Senate committee by District Attorney Graham, which are likely to be the basis of the bill recommended in the Senate.

Something definite must be done before the abuse complained of attains greater dimensions and becomes so fixed as to make its dislodgment impossible. The New York Sun applauded the appointment of Mr. Phelps to England when it was made, but now is not so warmly inclined to it. It is disposed to criticize Mr. Phelps; and disclose the reason why in its statement that Mr. Tilden "made no effort to prevent the appointment of Mr. Phelps," though "it is true that Phelps has long been an undisputed and rather virulent foe of Mr. Tilden; but probably Mr. Cleveland was not aware of this when he determined to appoint him to the most important and desirable of our foreign missions."

The Sun shines for Mr. Tilden, and swears by him all the time; but the illumination of Mr. Tilden and the Sun from the White House apparently is susceptible of increase. And the Sun says it had better come if Mr. Cleveland wants to carry New York; which is a threat.

THE SECRET IS OUT. Mrs. Blaine called on Miss Cleveland to spite the Arthurs, whom she had "cut." It now turns out that the opposition to the underground wires at the present time comes from the fear that in burying the wires this coming summer, a fatal outbreak of cholera will be precipitated. It is passing strange that the public did not stumble on this reason sooner, and that its ignorance regarding this particular phase of the situation was dispelled by such a benevolent citizen as Cyrus W. Field. The fact that Mr. Field has been long accustomed to borrow the livery of philanthropy to serve monopoly will give his opinions an opposite weight from that which he may have intended.

MR. CLEVELAND has demonstrated to the satisfaction of Mr. Hendricks that vice-presidents have some rights which presidents are bound to respect. VASSAR COLLEGE is determined to keep in the front rank in providing educational facilities for the young women who grace its halls. Its masculine competitors, with any pretensions to completeness, have gymnasia, and Vassar's alumnae have already raised $7,500 of a necessary $20,000 to secure one for themselves. They will then realize the truth of the ancient saw "a sound mind in a sound body."

THE EXAMINER modestly inquires why it is that in the "Philadelphia conference of the Methodist Episcopal church," the local churches are so much "mixed"; and the districts are not made to conform to the civil divisions of counties. Easily answered. Until within a few years ago the districts were arranged upon the plan that naturally suggests itself to the Examiner. But the country preachers found themselves rotated around in the country, and the city preachers only exchanged the more desirable pulpits with each other. The rural clergy broke down the bars some years ago and connected suburban and country territory in the different districts. If the Examiner will closely study the Methodist conference it will find what Bishop Foss told the brethren the other day that is a considerable politics in it.

THE WILKESBARRE STREET barber shop in an East Market Street barber shop displayed a rather unique sign. It reads as follows: "Arthur Carter, boss boot black in God Almighty's world." If he wasn't 't' boss in the world referred to I don't know what other planet he could lay claim to. For ten cents Arthur made my old breeches look like new. I asked him why it was that there were no boot blacks on the streets in Wilkesbarre. He said it had been tried time and again but never could be made to pay. This is strange in view of the fact that in other cities no larger than Wilkesbarre, there are boot blacks on every block, and in some cases, as at Harrisburg, Lancaster and Reading, as soon as you step off a train you are surrounded by an array of knights in blue, all anxious to "shine 'em up" for half a dime. In Wilkesbarre you pay a dime and hunt up the man who is to do the work besides.

WOOD AND BARK. The One Pays and the Other Always a Losing Operation. From the Germanian Telegraph. If all the productions of the earth were the result of spontaneous growth, there would be no occasion to speak of farming with any degree of comparison, nor would there be either good farmers or bad farmers, since there would be no occasion for any effort on the part of man in the harvesting of the spontaneous production. But it was decreed at first that, as regards man, by the sweat of his brow should he eat bread. This implies the imposition of labor upon mankind in all departments of industry, and so far as it relates to the farmer, its application and direction determines the comparative position of different individuals touching good and bad farming. The same sun shines, the same dews distill, the same blast threaten, the same showers descend, the same breezes blow over the domain of the good and bad farmer alike. So in regard to all natural climatic conditions, all farmers stand equal.

MR. CLEVELAND to a "friend" who called to say that he had decided not to bring any petition with him from New York, but to seek generally for anything that was vacant and trust to luck, is reported to have answered: "Try Pennsylvania avenue; that is not so crowded as it has been."

HER FEET TO RAGGED AND TORN AND OLD. Her feet are bare, and her shoulders fall. Some shawling curls on her shoulders fall. And a train is made of a worn-out shawl. Some flowers that once were a beauty's pride, And now are withered on the roadside, And she is as close as her fingers can, While a crumpled hand bill serves for a fan. You would never have guessed, as you saw her there, With those withered flowers, and feet all bare, That the glossy street was a brilliant ball, And she dancing there, the belle of the ball. -Alice Trumbull Leonard, in the Century Bazaar.

THE QUEEN OF THE ANTS. From the Cornhill Magazine. Most of the members of each community of honey ants are active and roving in their disposition, and show no tendency to undue distinction of the nether extremities. They go out at night and collect nectar or honey dew from the plants, and carry it back to their nests, which they carry home and give it to the retorts or honey bearers, who swallow it and store it in their round abdomens until they can hold no more. They pass their time chiefly in eating and drinking down the roof of their residence. When the workers require a meal they go up to the nearest honey bearer and stroke her gently with their antennae. The honey bearer then throws up her head and gives out a large drop of the amber liquid. The workers feed upon this, and in a few days two or three at once often standing around the living honey jar and lapping nectar together from the lips of their devoted comrade.

AN EMIGRANT WHO FORGOT HIS FAMILY. Marco Athanasiou left his wife, Eudoxia Stamboulis, and two young children at their home in Greece, and came to this country, promising to send for his family in a few months. He went to San Francisco and in a few years became a wealthy confectioner, but forgot that he had a family. Eudoxia and her two children arrived at Castle Garden three weeks ago, and thinking that San Francisco was only across the river, they had a dinner at the hotel and went to the telegraph office to see if they could recognize his family. Then they were sent by the commissioners of emigration to San Francisco, and the latest information is that Marco has fallen into the lawyers' hands and is likely to be squeezed as dry as one of his own lemons.

THE BROTHERS MURDER EACH OTHER. In Stewartville, Ind., Wednesday afternoon two farmers named Fleckman and Schardial, between whom a feud existed, met in the road and Fleckman cracked Schardial's head with a plow point. Schardial, though mortally wounded, made an onslaught with a paring knife and literally cut Fleckman's head off. Fleckman was a prosperous farmer. Schardial leaves a wife and one child.
