Published Every Wednesday Morning, TWO DOLLARS A YEAR IN ADVANCE. Correspondence solicited from every part of the State and Country. Correspondents are requested to write legibly and on one side of the paper only, and to sign their names, not in allusion, but in proof of good faith. All anonymous letters will be consigned to the waste basket. ADVERTISEMENTS BY THE INTELLIGENCER, LANCASTER, PA.

The Lancaster Intelligencer. LANCASTER, APRIL 5, 1885. Teaching Hygiene. The Pennsylvania legislature, by a very decided vote, in answer to many petitions and amid the most marked demonstrations of enthusiasm from the temperance ladies who filled the galleries, has passed the physiological-hygiene-alcoholic school bill; which, as we understand it, is a law requiring that every pupil in all the common schools of the state shall be taught physiology and hygiene, especially with regard to the effect of alcohol upon the human stomach. This topic is to be placed among the fundamental branches—heretofore limited to such as reading, writing, arithmetic, geography, grammar and United States history—which constitute the minimum of the common school curriculum and which every board of school directors is expected to enforce within its jurisdiction.

The law is in operation in New York, Massachusetts and some half-dozen other states. It is little too early to fully test the practicality or the efficacy of such a novel regulation. The governor of Pennsylvania may or may not add his approval to the bill; should he do so it will be, we suspect, more in deference to the apparent popular demand for it and to the wisdom of the bodies which have enacted it, than to any high respect for the bill itself, or any great faith in what it proposes to do. It has passed the legislature by a vote that would indicate the possibility of its passage even over the executive veto.

Assuming that it will be placed upon the statute books, we await its operation with some curiosity. The public will take some interest in examining the new physiology and hygiene, with special reference to the effect of alcohol on the human stomach. It will be curious to see local school boards shaping the curriculum so as to confer the benefits of the new study on all the pupils from the little tot in his pinafore to the young man sprouting a moustache. The variety of charts of human stomachs and of maps illustrative of the ravages upon them by alcohol, that are to adorn the walls of the school rooms in the future will be more picturesque than the average patent medicine almanac. Then there will be a contention in the school boards as to what the effects of alcohol are; and as to what percentage of alcohol certain drinks contain; and we can imagine the partisan friends of vinous, spirituous and malt liquors contending in some districts each for the control of the school board, so as to impress upon the curriculum the doctrine of their particular favorite beverage; and, at other places, where the theory may prevail of the majority of voters, that celebrated English doctor has put forth, that nothing is better for one's digestion with one's dinner than a quart of claret, it may happen the school teacher will be compelled to instruct his pupils that a little wine for the stomach's sake is a good thing. In Washington and Mercer and other counties where a strong anti-liquor sentiment prevails there will doubtless be introduced a text book, which will teach that all liquors are alcoholic and all alcohol is hurtful to the stomach. In Berks and Lehigh the directors will doubtless be best satisfied with a book showing that beer contains just the proper amount of alcohol to benefit the stomach, if moderately taken; while in Fayette and Westmoreland we shouldn't be surprised to have it set out in the adopted primers of hygiene that in the memorable quarrel between John L. Dawson and James Buchanan, as to the relative merits of Monongahela and Lancaster county whiskey, Dawson was eternally right and Buchanan eternally wrong, and that no whiskey made out there has enough alcohol in it to injure the human stomach that takes enough of it.

Then again, there are some school boards—indeed a good many of them—which may find the cheapest and most profitable text book on the new subject of enforced instruction in some frightful example selected from their own number; and as occasional visits on his part to the various school rooms may answer the purposes of the law if it does not strictly comply with the letter. Come to think of it, however, where is the school district in which there is not ever present some such example of the effect of alcohol, not only on the human stomach, but on the face and form divine, on the human brain and soul? And if you men heed not the warning, and the strong fall by the wayside, and if most of the legislators who make the law ignore its instruction, think you the country is to be saved through the dead speak to school children, through hygiene text-books and physiological charts and maps of inflamed stomachs and direful pictures of woeful ill?

A Strange Experience. The Philadelphia councilmen have had a strange experience in receiving from the chief engineer of their water department a vigorous statement about the condition of their water and the heatfulness of their speech, in response to their resolution requesting the chief engineer aforesaid to hold his tongue about the pollution of the water and the danger of disease from it. The experience is unusual because it is not often that city officials have spirit enough to talk up to the councilman who have power to displace them. Col. Ludlow evidently does not care to be continental for this danger.

modest correspondent, "E." sends me the score of the old song "Barbara Allen," which has been set in these columns and with it is enclosed a copy of a pamphlet reproducing the tune of "Barbara Allen" as sung by my mother in her youth, and who is now three-score and ten. If the endeavor will prove of interest and satisfaction to your correspondent 'N,' it will be gratifying to a constant reader of the INTELLIGENCER. Now who can supply the complete words of "Capt. Kidd"? "My name is Captain Kidd When I sailed, when I sailed, etc."

The first name in American literature—in point of time—was not given on Plymouth Rock, but was written in the sand that lay along the banks of the James river, Va. George Sandys was the name and his forgotten work was a translation of Ovid. For the past ten or twelve years the voice and pen of Charles R. Buckalew have not been heard and felt often in political discussions. He has recently published a timely and forcible article on Jefferson's theory and policy regarding the removal of Indians, which would afford the president a good beacon light to steer between the Scylla of civil service reform disappointments and the Charybdis of Democratic dissatisfaction. Ten years after Albert Gallatin quit active politics, and when he was 85 years of age, he published a pamphlet entitled "Peace with Mexico" of which 150,000 copies were circulated. There is a good crayon picture of Gallatin hanging in the handsome room of Lt. Gov. Black in the state capitol. Black knows all about Gallatin, "Friendship Hill" in Fayette county is named in his honor. Gallatin was part of the estate of the late John L. Dawson, dec'd, Gov. Black's father-in-law, and it is still the possession of his family. It was also one of the estates of the late Hon. John W. Nevin, of this city, is a daughter, "Friendship Hill" is in that district of Fayette county (pronounced "Fay") where the township meetings were held until the resolution of 1798. In that turbulent period of the late war, in that lieutenant governor's office, he had a hand in the election of his three long years of ex-Lt. Gov. Stone and Latta; General Simon Cameron, Judge Black and Senator Wallace. Gov. Black did not select the furniture for the room nor its wall ornaments, but they represent very good-looking men; and if there was a mirror on the wall the portrait of another might occasionally be seen.

When Adelaide Procter first began to write poetry and to send it to the Standard Word in the editorial direction of Charles Dickens, her father's friend, who was so conscientiously careful lest a personal consideration might be shown her that the merits of her composition would not have won, that she adopted a new de planum. It was so carefully concealed that Dickens did not discover her identity for over a year, and then only by accident, after, he says, he had come to regard the fictitious poetess as quite as real a personage as his own mother. Such nice scrupulousness would well bestir some later day writer. It is a good thing that a public great deal of trash unworthy of their reputations, and which they sell by their names, though it really discredits them.

I do not know that any of the alumni of Lincoln university, that most earnest and successful laborer in the field of education, has recited of better poetry than Phillis Wheatley wrote more than a hundred years ago. She was bought, at the age of eight, in the slave market of Boston, before slave-holding was unpopular in that climate. Her kidnapping had become unpopular in New England's surcharged moral atmosphere. She mourned George Whitefield's death in verse, and was praised for her virtues in tuncful panegyric; but alas! she married a kind of quack lawyer, barber and grocer and died with him in poverty. This black swan was torn to Africa.

What a funny figure he must have cut—this Benjamin Jay, who was the first free anti-slavery agitator in the United States, as Wendell Phillips and whose tongue ceased to wag a generation before "Uncle Tom" was born! He was only forty-eight inches in height, wore white hat and clothes and had a snowy beard as long as a horse's tail. He built the always Quakers around Philadelphia as relentlessly as their descendants afterwards bully-raggled the Southerners; and they used to carry him out of their meetings and lay him at the door step to be walked over because he wouldn't hold his tongue on the question when the others sought silent consolation from the spirit. He would rather trot around with an empty stomach than breakfast with a lady in velvet and diamonds, who had a straight-cut Quaker of that day nearly all took slavery in their, Friend Benjamin often missed the lunch room. He hated tea and coffee, and he sympathized with the black in bondage. Roast turkeys and cold water were the chief of his diet, and he was a vegetarian. He was the original "Mulberry Sellers." He once tried a forty-day fast and nearly starved to death. SINDBAD.

A CHICAGO SCANDAL. Two Wives Claiming a Wealthy Board of Trade Man as Their Husband. A sensation of large dimensions was created in Chicago, when it became generally known Thursday, that William H. A. Brown, a wealthy board of trade man, was under arrest, charged with bigamy. The warrant was sworn out several days ago. The story connected with the affair as given by the prosecution is as follows: Late in the fall of 1883 Mrs. Brown No. 1, a most estimable lady, departed from Chicago for the East on a visit to her friends. She remained absent from Chicago for the period of eight months or thereabouts. During the visit of the Chicago lady in the East, an Eastern lady came to Chicago, also on a visit to friends and relatives. The Eastern lady, whose maiden name was Carrie L. Barney, was about nineteen, handsome and intelligent, and soon, by her like manner, had formed a circle of associates, representatives of Chicago's best society. Among this circle of friends was William H. A. Brown, the defendant, who, although considerably older than Miss Carrie, was by her side as often as opportunity would admit. This was continued until Miss Carrie left the city to visit Detroit. There soon after her arrival Mr. Brown appeared and renewed his attentions to her, and she returned to her home before. Soon the train crossed over into Windsor, Canada, where they were married July 28, 1884. The couple returned to Chicago, and the young wife lived in happiness utterly ignorant of the surprise in store for her. It came in October last, and with it came a wife No. 2, and her seventeen-year-old daughter from the East. The scene between the two Mrs. Browns is passed over without comment, but related in Mrs. Brown No. 2 leaving the house. The alleged Mrs. Brown No. 2 expresses a determination to punish her alleged husband in the criminal court, and to secure alimony for separate maintenance in the civil court. Brown, she says, told her he had been divorced by a Federal court, and that truth, though she often wondered at his peculiar ways as well as the actions of his friends who were so ready to believe him. Mrs. Brown says the whole matter is a piece of blackmail; that this is denied by the attorney of Mrs. Brown No. 2, who says he has a certificate of the marriage in Windsor, Canada.

The Right to Open a Judgment. The chief justice of the supreme court has filed an opinion in the case of Stroud's appeal from the common pleas of Susquehanna county. The question involved was the right of a court to open a judgment and admit a defense to it in a writ of certiorari. The court below refused to open the judgment, and the supreme court, in its judgment, holds that the merits of an original judgment cannot be inquired into in a writ of certiorari. The practice of opening judgments, which had originated since the rendition of the judgment is not approved. Such a defense does not impair the original judgment. The decree of the lower court is affirmed, and the appeal dismissed with costs.

Rhode Island's State Election. The state election in Rhode Island was held on Wednesday. The vote was light, and the Republican ticket, headed by George F. W. C. Moore, for governor, was chosen by the usual majority.

A Venereal Pedestrian. From the Potomac Ledger. Philip Lenzinger, a still pretty active old man, whose residence is in Philadelphia, passed through Pottstown on Wednesday, on his way home from a visit on foot to parts of Berks and Lancaster counties. He stated he was in his 80th year, has frequently made trips out into the country, walking to 10 or 15 miles a day, or a less distance, as he felt like it. Mr. Lenzinger was born at Osnabruck, Germany, November 11, 1796. He came to this country sixty-one years ago, and being a coal miner by occupation, worked in the mines of Schuylkill county. He was the president of the German American society, and his mother died of consumption, and two are living. It is not often that we meet such pilgrims, staff in hand, making long tedious journeys, so cheerful and hearty, as this little old native of the kingdom of Han over.

Hon. S. A. Cox, United States minister to Turkey, is at Zanesville, O., at the bedside of his mother, who is dying.

DR. H. R. WARD, a well-known surgeon and physician, died Thursday morning in Norfolk, Virginia, aged 47 years.

Victor Hugo's absolute conviction is said to be that the priest and the convent are in every possible religion, and their influence has ever been fatal to humanity.

MR. COLEMAN, the newly-appointed commissioner of agriculture, is an enthusiastic admirer of the horse, and the plant which will soon furnish the entire sugar supply of the United States.

LIBERTY GREENE, who remains in Washington, is still quite a figure in society circles on account of his Arctic expeditions. He wears his hair slightly long and cultivates a general air of affected indifference to the attention which is paid him.

SECRETARY LAMAR has fitted up a bath room adjoining the interior department, with marble slabs, carved mahogany, elegant chairs, costly mirrors, Turkish towels, brushes and other requisites, including perfumed soaps and sweet-smelling waters. He is a devotee of the bath, and has a bath with a departure from Jeffersonian simplicity. Surely a man's disposition to be clean should not be quarreled with.

QUANT though the construction of the following poem, yet never has the story of the Cross been told with more truthful simplicity: Most they who seek White in their youth, With spirit meek, To them the Cross is a new display, Christ as the only true and living way; His precious blood on Calvary was given To make them heirs of endless life in heaven. The glorious blessings of his savior's grace, For them he bore His father's frown; Had in every possible religion, and their influence has ever been fatal to humanity.
