The family of J. R. Stokes, of Smithville, are in possession of some rare and valuable old queensware which is held ascred as family heirlooms, having been handed down the line of descendants for years. They consist of one-half dozen red-flowered breakfast plates, three containing in the centre an illustration of the bridge of St. Maurice, and three an illustration of the Florentine Fountain. They are much over one hundred. three an illustration of the Florentine Fountain. They are much over one hundred years old; another half dozen blue-flowered breakfast plates are over seventy-five years old. A large dinner plate is about one hundred years old, a large blue flowered water pitcher, seventy-five years old. A large tea pot, embellished with pictures, represents garden scenery. This is for age, the most valuable in the lot. It is computed as being about one hundred and fifty years; a large blue-edged, and one extra large green-edged roast plate, each of which is over one hundred years old. They are highly treasured and the family could not be induced to part with one piece of this valuable queensware. E. E. Stokes, the oldest son of J. R. Stokes, is also in possession of some very interesting war relies, among the lot being an old Revolutionary sabre and a pair of sabres which had been in the Confederate service during the late war and a Southern dueling sword, a number of bullets and shot. These articles he gathered during a trip over the South and Southern fields of battle. He has many other curiosities, among them Indian relies, old coins, old German and English books, etc.
