LANCASTER, APRIL 14, 1888.

The Coming War. It looks very much, indeed, as though England and Russia are to engage in a protracted struggle for Asiatic ascendancy. The impression heretofore has been that war would not come, because it would not pay either party to fight for the matter in dispute between them, which seemed to be the location of the Afghan boundary. It has been thought that Russia, particularly, could not really be desirous of engaging in war with so powerful an enemy, in view of her political and financial weakness. Her ambition to extend her territorial lines, seemed to be senseless in view of her present unwieldy limits. And as to England's desire for war, it has been taken for granted that it would be fully satisfied with the fights she has now on hand.

But all this sound reasoning of sensible people goes for nought in view of the onstrations that both England and Russia want to go to war. There can hardly be a doubt of this any longer in any mind. General Komaroff first began the fighting and testified to Russia's eagerness for the struggle. The English government is apparently hanging back in the hope of finding a peaceful solution of the quarrel despite the battle that has been fought in it. It may be that Gladstone desires peace and does not think time to be opportune for England to engage in another war. Or it may be that he is essaying Russian diplomacy and deceit, and under the cover of his apparent hesitation is hurrying forward in secrecy the Indian troops to the scene of the conflict. Whatever may be Gladstone's aims, it is clear enough that the English people behind him call for a speedy and vigorous rally to arms. Upon all sides it is seen that General Komaroff's attempt to give a pacific appearance to his battle is an imposture: it is clear that his act was aggressive. His government has commended and decorated him for it. It has demonstrated that it is for war.

Why Russia should have this seemingly mad purpose is the puzzle; and there seems ther way of accounting for it than by the supposition that her rulers conceive that an effective way to heal her internal troubles will be to engage in a foreign war, which will have the sympathy of the people enlisted in it. The Russian people desire war with England and the Russian government is reduced to satisfy the desire in the belief that it will strengthen itself thereby internally, where it so much needs healing. Another consideration probably is that this is a very opportune time to engage with England while she has another war or so on her hands. It is true that Russia is poor in money; but she has abundant food resources and plenty of men; and soldiers, and the wherewithal to feed them, are the only really essential equipment for a war. Russia can go to war if she wants to; and she almost certainly wants to.

It will be a great conflict if it comes, and cannot but be helpful to the productive industries of this country. Russian grain will be kept from export and English commerce will leave the seas. We will take the place of each warring country in supplying the world. This is the common view taken of the effect of the war, and a correct one; although there are those who claim that we will not reap any great benefit from our neutrality and that European investors in our stocks will sell them out, as well as their own, and hoard their gold. It seems, however, too clear for dispute that with two great nations of the world fighting instead of producing, and hampered instead of free in their commerce, another great nation, producing and with unrestricted commerce, is bound to profit greatly by the situation. The only question in the matter is, whether the war is at hand; and notwithstanding its self-syident and supreme folly, it seems to be written

Too Many Judges.

The work of Judge Futhey, of Chester county, baving got ahead of him, the lawyers there agreed upon the necessity for another judge and had the bill creating the office promptly passed by the legislature; but it runs against a snag in the shape of a veto by Governor Pattison. Like most other people of the commonwealth, he thinks it already has too many judges; and he declines to so soon lend his aid to the amendment of the judicial apportionment bill passed two years ago. He thinks it fair to assume that no necessity has arisen since then for a new judge in Chester county; and in this view he is probably correct, as he certainly is in the meral statement that too frequent tinkering with the apportionments is to be con-demned and that we "have almost reached the extreme limit where any addition to the ranks of judges is very likely to cheapen the judicial office and impair its dignity.' But in view of the character of the last judicial apportionment bill and the circumstances under which the governor signed it, his veto of the Chester county relief act would have been strong enough had it rested simply on the demonstration that no extra judge is needed there, without reference to the apportionment of 1883. The fact that that bill provided for certain judges and failed to make provision for others, creates no presumption whatever that some are needed or that others are superfluous For the bill was a monstrosity, and much that the governor now says in his Chester county veto could have been said with even more relevancy in disapproval of the act of 1883. After Butler and Lawrence had been yoked in one judicial district, with two judges, it is no wonder the Chester county people thought that almost anything in the shape of a judicial bill could ran the gauntlet at Harrisburg. With York and Northampton each enjoying two judges, and Berks three; with Wyoming and Sullivan constituted into a district; Fulton hooked on to Adams; and with two and half districts made out of one in which Judge Dean said he could easily do all the work himself, while Montgomery, bigger than Northamp-ton or York, sails along serenely with one judge—Chester, no doubt, deemed herself modest in not asking for an orphans court The governor has echoed the popular complaint that we have too many judges. and that they are of too cheap a pattern if the number could be reduced we would be apt to get a better kind.

The Public Lands. Secretary Lamar has declared to the Oklahoma settlers, or to those who would be such, that he holds Oklahoma to be within the Indian reservation and therefore not open to entry or settlement by white citizens. To the representation made to him that cattle companies occupied and had fenced in these lands, he replied that they would not be permitted to do so. It is said to be the immediate purpose of the president to warn off the public lands all these intruding cattle companies and to require them to take down their fences. It is astounding that such impudent occupation of the public lands should have thus long been permitted. The people who have done this wrong can surely do it no more, if this administration is worth but the one-half of the esteem in which it is now held. The day has nearly gone by when private corporations can profit by feeding their cattle on the public lands. The enterprising people who want to make quick fortunes out of the increase of their herds and flocks must hereafter take into the expense account the interest on the purchase money of the lands upon which their cattle feed.

THERE are three Washington papers that propose pooling their issues in the establishment of their respective journals. They are the Post, Democratic, the Republican, Republican, and the Critic, with no decided politics. It is proposed to printall three papers nder the same root, each establishment to have its separate counting room and its own force of special editorial and political writers as heretofore, and as far as desirable its own compositors, but that the three shall have practically a joint reportorial force, and where it can be effected joint arrangements for all other departments. The printing of the three papers will be entirely of a joint character, done on the same press and done by the same set of hands. For all the strength these papers possess it would be just as well to join forces in the make-up of their editorial pages No one ever pretended that they had any influence in directing the current of thought in the Capital city.

THE green dress of the Princess of Wales seems to have lost its charm in Mallow and

DR. JOHN J. MORAN, who was attending physician at the Washington College University hospital, where Edgar A. Poe died; and who ministered to that wayward genius in his last extremity, prints a monograph narrative of his last illness, in which he vindicates him from the popular idea that his death was the result of a debauch. If the facts areas related by Dr. Moran it is strange that a different story should so long have had lodgment in the popular mind, and that it should have even been accepted by most of Poe's biographers. According to this last witness Poe had left off drink at that time; he was the victim of Baltimore roughs who drugged and robbed him and left him to be picked up and treated as a drunkard; but upon close investigation he was discovered not to have been drinking at all, but to have been the victim of an assault which was fatal to his delicate and neryour organization. He obstinately refused to take either stimulant or opiate and died without the odor of liquor on his breath.

THE statistics of immigration gathered by the statistical bureau at Washington are supposed to cover 97 per cent. of the immigration into the entire country. It is seen by an examination of the returns from the several customs districts for March that Germany still keeps up her great preponderance as an immigration centre. Of the total number of immigrants there arrived from England and Wales, 2,666; Ireland, 2,187; Scotland, 682; Austria, 931; Bohemia, 281 Belgium, 148; Denmark, 563; France, 1,130; Germany, 7,407; Hungary, 1,144; Italy, 1,130 : Netherlands, 204 : Norway, 376 : Russia, 886; Poland, 143; Sweden, 1,057; Switzerland, 702 : Dominion of Canada, 2,410, and from all other countries, 233. The total number of immigrants for the year ending March 1885, was 224,680; for the corresponding year previous it was 304,825; showing that either the tide of emigration is becoming smaller or that a large portion of it is being elsewhere diverted. Should the surface of European politics be ruffled by a war, as now seems probable, it will have the effect of keeping at home many who would otherwise have betaken themselves to other shores.

LABOUCHERE has started a raid on gloves.

"For my part," he says in London Truth,

"I detest gloves, except when there is dancing, or in the open air, as protection from the sun or dust. The constantly gloved hand becomes stupid-looking and loses address. Gloves in conjunction with court dresses were a device of the Empress Josephine to conceal the traces of the washtub on the hands and arms of marshals' wives who had risen from the common people, and to hide the manual beauty of her sister-in law. Before her time they were only worn in the traveling coach."

AN EXECUTIVE VETO.

Governor Pattison Recognizes no Necessity fo an Additional Law Judge in Chester County. Governor Pattison has returned to the Senate without his approval the act provid-ing for an additional law judge for the Fifeenth (Chester) district, accompanied by the

"The number of judges in the common-wealth is already so large and the expense of maintaining the judicial system so great that an addition to either can only be justified by the most urgent necessity or the plainest constitutional command.
"In the judgement of the executive no such reason exists for the passage of the bill.

bill.

"The judicial apportionment act was passed at the extra session of the legislature a little more than eighteen month ago. The Fifteenth judicial district, as at present existing, was constituted by the act. Is it reasonable to suppose that anything has occurred since then requiring the additional judge given to that district by this bill? The county of Chester has not since then increased its requisition to any considerable extent.

county of Chester has not since then increased its population to any considerable extent, nor has anything occurred to appreciably augment its judicial business.

"For all practical purposes it is correct to a being the condition of that county to-day as being the same that it was at the time of the extra session. Why, then, should the general law passed at that session be now changed by the addition of another judge? I can conceive of no reason for the increase. can conceive of no reason for the increase, and therefore decline giving it the sanction of my signature. The habit of frequently of my signature. The habit of frequently tinkering at general apportionment laws is to be condemned. The constitution commands that the judicial districts of the state shall be apportioned every ten years. Whije authority is also given to create additional courts and judges from time to time, the fundamental law undoubtedly contemplates that, except in rare cases and for urgent reasons, the decennial apportionment urgent reasons, the decennial apportionment should remain unchanged for ten years. The idea of a permanent general statute, to be of force for a decade, underlies the constitutional provision commanding the decennial appor-tionment. The present bill conflicts with the purpose without, to my mind, any adequate reasons.

"Experience and the judgment of the most thoughtful men concur in the belief that the judicial system suffers in dignity, usefulness and public respect by having too numerous a body of judges. The people, I believe, would welcome a change which would reduce the number of judges. It is cartain that no increase is demanded, and none, I think, would be useful. We have almost reached the extreme limit where any addition to the ranks of judges is very likely to cheapen the judicial office and impair its dignity. For these reasons I withhold my approval."

THE DESTRUCTION OF THE TREES. A Waste That Every One Can Help to Replace

on Thursday. By Madame Michelet. Alas, in how many places is the forest which once lent us shade nothing more than a memory! The grave and noble circle which adorned the mountain is every day con tracting. Where you come in hope of seeing life, you find but the image of death. O, who will really undertake the defense of the trees, and rescue them from senseless destruction? Who will eloquently set forth their manifold mission, and their active an ncessant assistance in the regulation of the laws which rule our globe? Without them, it seems delivered over to blind destiny, which will involve it again into chaos The motive powers and purificators of the atmosphere through the re-piration of their foliage, avaricious collectors to the advantage of future ages of the solar heat, it is they which pacify the storm and avert its most disastrous consequences. In the low-lying plains, which have no outlet for their values the trees love before the story of waters, the trees, long before the advent of man, drained the soil by their roots, forcing the stagnant waters to descend and construct at a lower depth their useful reservoirs. And now, on the abrupt declivities, they consoli-date the crumbling soil, check and break the torrent, control the melting of the snows, and preserve to the meadows the fertile humidity which in due time will overspread them with a sea of flowers. And is not this enough? To watch over the life of the plant enough? To watch over the life of the plant and its general harmony, is it not to watch over the safety of humanity? The tree, again, was created for the nurture of man, to assist him in his industries and his arts. It is owing to the tree, to its soul, earth-buried for so many centuries, and now restored to light, that we have secured the wings of the light, that we have secured the wings of the steam-engine. Thank heaven for the trees! With my feeble voice I claim for them the gratitude of man.
