LANCASTER, APRIL 18, 1885.

Sorry He is Not There. We are sorry that Senator Wallace is not present to take a hand in the enactment of the law which he has had the honor of fathering along with Senator Lee. Mr. Wallace, being the president of an important railroad in the state, is especially fortified to champion the anti-discrimination legislation which he has proposed. All the other railroad presidents, so far as heard from, are opposed to his law. President Roberts, of the Pennsylvania, has appeared at Harrisburg to protest against it. He finds one of its great hardships to be that it requires his railroad to receive on its line the cars of any other railroad, and to carry them at no greater charge than it would make against its most favored customer. The contractor, who is running Senator Wallace's Beech Creek road, had the same idea about the propriety of his shutting out all disagreeable customers from his public highway that President Roberts has, and he locked the switches on Clearfield coal miners who would not sell their coal to the Clearfield Bituminous Ceal company but wanted to sell it directly to their own customers. Under Senator Wallace's enlightened persuasion. General McGee, the contractor, seems to have seen the error of his ways, for he has unlocked the switches and promises to carry coal for any miner to any customer at a fair rate. As Senator Wallace was so successful in this instance in impressing his views upon his associated, we would have

Niagara as a Public Park.

All friends of the picturesque and lovers of the wondrous will be pleased at the passage of the Niagara reservation bill by the New York legislature. It is now in the hands of the governor, who has all along been very friendly to the project, and that it will be enacted into a law can admit of no further question. It is not saying too much to assert that this is the wisest work of New York's present legislative body. and it must be regretfully admitted that their Pennsylvania brethren have done nothing approaching it in sagacity. The latter have deemed it proper to fasten on the people of the state a most absurd temperance instruction law, and compared to this, the recent work of the New York legislature gains added lustre.

With Niagara Falls and its adjacent neighborhood under state ownership and supervision, the woes of the tourist will be lessened, and this charming spot will become more than ever the Mecca for future bridal tours. The suave highwayman who was ready at every point with a demand for shekels before his fortress might be passed will be no more, and the unending beauties of this great natural wonder will be accessible to those whose means are far below their capacity for enjoyment. But the best feature of the law will be the protection that this famous spot will now receive from the greed of private ownership under which many of its beauties were rapidly disappearing. A state commission will now be responsible for its proper care and the wholesale destruction of trees and the tampering by unsympathetic hands with places where nature wantoned in a wealth of wild grandeur will be stopped. Those who are behind this work are building better than they know. They are laying up for themselves reputations that will make their names bright among the generations that will live after them and profit by their thought-

If a provision had been added to the bill to prohibit hackmen from plying their vocation within ten miles of the park, its scope of usefulness would have been much widened.

He Should Be a Slave to Silence. Mr. John E. Faunce, member of the legislature from Philadelphia, writes to the Record that he never replies to newspaper criticisms, but violates his rule to correct the Record's statement that he had represented himself to the friends of anti-discrimination legislature as being in its favor and then dodged the vote on an important feature of it. We are of the decided opinion that Mr. Faunce's practice of refusing to notice newspaper criticism is a very wholesome one for him to adopt, in view of his great failure, in the one instance in which he has done otherwise, to properly answer the criticism. Mr. Faunce is compelled to admit that he did not vote on the amendment in question and he has no explanation to offer for his failure to do so. He seems inclined to stand on his reputation as one who could not dodge. We fear it will not sustain him. Mr. Faunce intimates that he is in favor of a certain kind of legislation against railroad discrimination, but he does not like the kind proposed; which, he says, violates the constitution in enabling a railroad official who violates the law to be tried in any part of the commonwealth in which the offense is committed, though it be not in the "vicinage" of his residence. Mr.

the vicinage," prohibits his trial outside of the county where he resides, though his of-fense was committed outside.

Nor does Mr. Faunce show a high appre ciation of the intelligence of the people, or manifest even the average intelligence of the legislator, when he declares that it is contrary, " not only to the spirit and letter of the constitution, but to common sense," to enact that railroads shall connect and interchange business with one another. Inasmuch as this is the direct command of the constitution, Mr. Faunce shows very small acquaintance with its letter and spirit, in declaring the free connection of railroads to be unconstitutional: and what his degree of good sense may be, will be readily decided by the people to whom he offers his opinion that railroads should be permitted to refuse to connect with other railroads.

Mr. Faunce would do well to quit replying to newspaper criticism. Mr. Faunce would do well to study the constitution. And Mr. Faunce would do well to quit the legislature, until he understands it better and learns better how to expound it. Until then, dear Faunce, we would like to bid you adieu.

A PITTSBURG wife became so infatuated with base ball last summer that she entirely neglected household affairs, and her husband asks a divorce in consequence. This seems to be a case of a home run badly.

HAZEN has been reprimanded for impertinence; why should be be spared for his weather reports?

THERE have been many reasons for setting aside the verdict of a jury, but it is doubtful whether any other court has been required to wrestle with the reason for so doing with which the Kansas supreme court is now grappling. It may be briefly summed up as prayer in the jury room. The lawyer who makes the point, in all seriousness, doubtless, declares that there can be no legal objection to "a private petition to the throne of grace earnestly offered by a conscientious juror with the motive of freeing his own mind from prejudice and passion." But he asserts the same claim cannot be made for public prayer, the fact being admitted that when the jury retired one of the jurymen had the others to join in prayer for divine guidance to a righteous decision As the issue was eventually decided in favor of the side to which the praying juror adhered, the opposition deemed the praying proper ground on which the verdict might be invalidated. The court has a hard nut to crack in determining the legal status of a preliminary prayer in a jury room.

Ir England and Russia should come to blows it will raise some interesting questions for the United States to solve. Nearly all of our carrying trade is now in British bottoms, and if a war came, they would be subject to the dangers of search by the enemy. If the United States had their own vessels, these risks would be obviated. As the law now stands, no vessel can fly the American flag if it be foreign built, so that our citizens could not buy ships abroad and protect them with our flag. Therefore it is that an observant Washington correspondent deems it advisable in the event of war to call an extra session of Congress to provide means for enabling American shipping to get the full advantage of the hostilities between the two nations. It is a poor rule, however, to decide important questions, before necessity urges.

It is now stated that Komaroff knew all about the understanding that existed between England and Russia at the time he made the attack upon the Afghans. This much has been suspected by all acquainted with the known treachery of the Muscovite character. The wonder is that England remains so supine under the discoveries she is making. In the same breath in which the news of Komaroff's treachery is conveyed comes the information that peace negotiations are progressing favorably; which would mean that there was no longer any danger attached to stopping on the English lion's tail.

Poor Gordon could not help taking a quaintly humorous view of things, even in the dark days at Khartoum. When he found the dark days at Khartoum. When he found that Mr. Gladstone's government was persistently disregarding his appeal for aid, and became convinced that he was to be a martyr to duty, he naturally blamed Sir Evelyn Baring for his abandonment and said so bluntly in his diary; but he added, with a keen recollection of his own last journey across the desert, "Oh. Evelyn! Evelyn! I would forgive you all your iniquities if I could see you bumping across the Korosko desert upon a came!!"

They have tried to drag him into their personal squabbles. He said the other day: "The Washington people must be a very queer set. I don't believe I'll like Manning with a new Western member yes-terday, and when we got into the room his courage forsook him and be wanted to beat a hasty retreat. "Pon't you think we had better call another time?" he whispered. "He looks very busy. I--I--I--really I think it would be better--much better. I-I-I-you know; sha'n't we go now? I ain't in any hurry." His teeth actually chattered, such was his embarrassment. Finally, one of the old members came up and shoved him in the back and he was forced up before, the in the back and he was forced up before the mighty presence. Then he found he had for-gotten what he wanted to say.

A new member was hanging around the East room the other day taking in all the newness of the new, and unconsciously got a position near the door. He had been standing there pretty quietly for some time, when suddenly he found himself confronted by shout half a dozen young ladies, who stood smiling up into his face. Then one of them stepped forward and said: "We want to see the president. Won't you take us in to him?" He clapped one hand over his bald head and looked embarrassed for a moment. Then he looked embarrassed for a moment. Then he thought, "Oh, it's some of my constituents. They know me, and it won't do to let them see I have forgotten them." So he bowed very politely and said: "Oh, certainly; most delighted. Come, I'll take you right up." He led the way, beaming like a good shepherd, all the merry madens following behind. They were presented to Miss Cleveland—the president was locked up with his cabinet and could not be seen—and were taken through the conservatory and all of the building that is opened to visitors, and the venerable Mr. C— was just bowing them farewell, when he heard one of them say: "I didn't know they had old men for ushers. I thought they were all young. But he's very

The department cierks have done more work since the 4th of March than in any corresponding period within the memory of any one. The idea that they are to stand on their merits has inspired them. On entering the departments you are struck with their diligence. You wonder where all the gossiping women are, and why the corridors are so bare and deserted. The Saint-Raphset Wine has a delicious flavour and is drunk in the principal cities of Russia, Germany, North and South America, Great Britain, India, and so on. The quantity exported annually is sufficient proof of its stability and staying powers, while for the real connoisseur there is no wine that can be considered its superior.

He has been the cause of some serious spats, and has been turned over on the tongue of gossip, but a word against him was quickly frowned down and society shut its eyes to all his shortcomings. His absence leaves a vacant place at many merry tea tables and dinner parties. He possessed just the requisite amount of small talk to make his company very agreeable on such occa sions. From his constant association with ladies, he frequently forgot himself and dropped into these shiny little nothings while in consultation with his cabinet Sometimes the whole time would pass with out business being reterred to. He was very fond of flowers, and always had the best from the greenhouse arranged about his private office. He would frequently call the attention of his cabinet to the beauty of some particular flower, and drop off into a discusdon of plants, and then recall how become ing were the roses worn by some lady at this

The attendants place fresh flowers on his desk every morning, but he pays no attention to them. He is bluff and downright in his speech, and evinces no taste for social frivoli-ties. He has not taken part in any of the social chit-chats since he went into the White House, and if he doesn't look out he will be considered "altogether too horrid for any-thing." When he is compelled to go through the hand-shaking ordeal, he has a good-natur-

Mr. Cleveland has a way of finding something amusing about things that would be matters of great concern to almost any other man in his place. He amuses himself sometimes by quizzing some of those who come times by quizzing some of those who come to bore him about the offices. With a great deal of seriousness he asks them all sorts of questions about themselves, and tells them all about what nuisances the office-seekers are. It is not until they have thought the matter over for a couple of hours, that they discover that the objects of their visit were quite forgotten. When he is very nuch bored he has a way of going to the back bored he has a way of going to the back window and looking away off down the Potemac. Tough Old Soldier.

There are various forms of dyspepsia, chiefly acute and chronic. "Acute" may seize you in a moment, in the shape of a sudden fit of indigestion. "Chronic" keeps its victim in perpetual pain and worry. Even old Chronic can be rooted out by Brown's Iron Bitters. Mr. I. I. Cavins, of Dinwiddie, Va., says, "Brown's Iron Bitters made me entirely well of dyspepsia of twenty years' standing." If it will do such a wonder as that, what will it do for your comparatively recent case?
