LANCASTER, APRIL 24, 1885.

A Laureate's Decadence. Alfred Tennyson, poet laureate of Eng land and, being recently raised to the age by his gracious queen, now baron something of somewhere, has felt imcelled by the force of his position in the salm of letters and in the civil state, to write a new poem. It is intended to call the attention of England to the insufficiency of its fleet, and to upbraid somebody for its falling off.

It might be suspected that in cabling ds poem over to us as the production of the loftiest, living, literary genius, at this time of a great national crisis, when England's weakness is pitifully exposed and her prestige on the seas is endangered, ne of the British people were playing a trick on the American newspapers or their own bard. But Mr. Tennyson has done some such very bad things in this line, and his attempts to fire the national heart have so often been melancholy failures, that we are reluctantly constrained to believe he really wrote the balderdash printed over his familiar name in the London Times of sterday. The least captious critic will readily admit that scarcely any other name attached to these lines could have secured for them local publication, let alone a world-wide reading. They are utterly destitute of poetic sentiment, or a single spark of the divine afflatus; and will be viewed simply as a literary curiosity, and with wonder that a poet of Mr. Tennyson's reputation could have so lacked discrimination as to print them, even had he so far fallen from his high estate as to write them.

For, like his recent ode to Freedom in comparison with that brilliant outburst "Of old sat Freedom on her heights," or like his 'Charge of The Heavy Brigade" aside of the earlier, spirited and dashing lines about Balaklava, Mr. Tennyson's later work shows a mournful decadence of his former powers. It is useless to deny him a high place among the poets of the century ; or that he has far better earned the post of laureate than many who preceded him in it. He has fione much to express and to strengthen the national spirit of England, and even his poems for special occasions, when poets generally fall far short of their best powers, have contributed no little to the literature of his age. Who has better described the genius of England's free government than his tribute to the "august decree" of

is to appoint nobody to office whom they do not like, and especially creatures so ob-nozious to their feelings as ancient Demo-crats of what they were wont to style the opperhead type. In war times every Democrat was a copperhead ; in these days it is admitted that some Democrats went to the war and that they must have been loyal. The Mugwump of the nation, who are all lately extracted from Republican nests, and who are as brim-full of patriotism now as they were in the war days when they stayed in our cities and wearied heaven with prayers for the success of our arms and the damnation of Democrats, declare to President Cleveland that they have no objection at all to his appointing to office Democrats who went out to the war and so were not copperheads. They declare that there are plenty of them around although they used to swear that no Democrats went to fight the rebels without being changed on the instant into Republicans. The Magwump element is so satisfied with its success in boosting Pearson into the New York postoflice, that it does not propose to cease from its labors until it has a child of its adoption in every place. We await with interest to see the result of its campaign. It may be that the Democratic party did not elect Mr. Cleveland, and that his elevation was the unaided result of Mugwump strength and valor. But we are of opinion that if ever there was : house founded on the sand, such will be a political fabric raised upon a Mugwump base.

The Barden of Proof.

The Philadelphia Press calls upon th INTELLIGENCER to "prove its denial" of the Press' assertion "that the Democracy have made three attempts to steal the presidency, namely, in 1876, 1880 and 1884, that they finally succeeded last year and included in the burglary forty seats in the next Congress." The INTELLIGENCER has called upon the Press to prove its assertion. This is the logical and usual course, we believe, with intelligent newspapers and responsible people who make charges. The fellow in cap and bells whom some inscrutable dispensation has allowed to creep into the columns of the Press should have a surgical operation performed on his head. He seems to be as deficient in logic as he is of truth or sense. If he desires to escape the imputation of publishing a malicious and wicked lie, let him proceed with his proof. Until he does so he stands pilloried.

IT may happen that the early bud will be aught.

THE poet laureate of the Philadelphia Ledger's obituary column was at his bes yesterday. He soared thus :

We miss you when the morning dawns : We miss you when the night returns ; We miss you here, we miss you there, Dear Robble, we miss you everywhere. Gone to meet his papa.

WITH the bursting buds and singing birds and humming bees comes also the spring poet. We must draw the line somewhere, and it is drawn at A. Tennyson, poet laureate.

THE physicians who have been making capital for themselves out of the illness of General Grant very probably possess a potential influence with the Medical Record, for the whole of the last report of this publication on Grant's condition is devoted to a defense of these practitioners. The most bare-faced hedging is apparent in its remark. "The medical staff has also maintained that the amount of the general constitutional depression was out of all proportion to the extent (the local disease ; that the latter would not at itself be the cause of the death unless by the accidental erosion of a large artery or possible strangulation from the sudden separation of the slough." Yet those who will remember the bullatins and interviews with the doctors recall that the local disease was everything, and that the exhaustion produced was simply the natural consequence of it. It is only since some enterprising newspapers penetrated the sick room that the doctors have found out that the local disease in itself was not necessarily fatal. It looks very much as though the Grant physicians had entered into a conspiracy to get Grant at death's door and then earn a nation's grati-

POCAHONTAS MUST GO. THE INEXORABLE HISTORIAN DE-CLARES THAT SHE IS A MYTH.

the Pretty Romance Connected With He saving the Life of Captain John Smith Said to Have Originated in the Latter's Fertile Brain.

From the Philadelphia Bulletin Must we give up another fond legend, cherished since those glorious days of child hood, when we were first taught the outline of American history? Must we give up Pocahontas-the gentle, generous daughter of fierce Powhatan-the dark red or copper olored maiden, who tell in love with tain John Smith and interceded to save his life just as the executioner's bludgeon was raised to strike ? Alas, we fear that even this sacrifice must be made upon the altar of in-exorable Truth. Mr. W. F. Poole, the wellknown librarian of Chicago, in a recent article, sums up the evidence and shows that the Princess Pocahontos of our childhood was myth. At the time when Captain Smith was supposed to have fallen in love with her cut of gratitude for her intercession, Powhatan's daughter was but "a child of tenne years old." And, what is even more damaging to the legend, it seems that accord ing to Smith's own statement his life was never "in danger at any time after he was brought into the presence of Powhatan"-so that obviously the episode of the entreating Pocahontas, the brawny executioner, with his bludgeon high in air, and Captain Smith prone on the ground, tied hand and foot, with his head on a log and an expression of suspense on his countenance, existed only in the brain of some imaginative chronicler.

The captivity of Smith took place in 1608, and in that year he wrote and published in London his "True Relation" of it. It was not until 1624 that an edition with some addi tions appeared, and in it the first hint from which the whole story has been fabricated. The tale runs thus : "Having feasted him after their best bar barous manner they could, a long consulta tion was held, but the conclusion was, two great stones were brought before Powhatan; then as many as could layd hands on him, dragged him to them, and thereon laid his head, and being ready with their clubs to beat out his brains, Pocahontas the Kings beat out dearest daughter, when no intreaty could prevail, got his head in her armes, and laid her owne upon his to save him from death; whereat the Emperor was contented he should live to make him hatchets, and her bells, beads and copper; for they thought him as well of all occupations as themselves." him as well of all occupations as themselves." Having regretfully surrendered the legend itself we are prepared to know the truth about Pocahontas, who was, indeed a real person, but who did not possess the estima-ble qualities which tradition has given her. Thus her very name—Pocahontas—signifies "Little wanton," and according to the In-dian fashion she ran naked until she was about twelve years old—two years, at least after the Smith episode. When, some time later, she married the Englishman Rolfe, nothing was reported about her having saved Captain John Smith's life, But Mr. Poole finds it easy to explain the original of the Captain John Smith's life, But Mr. Poole finds it easy to explain the original of the legend. He says: "The weak spot in Smith's character was his personal vanity and boastfulness. He in-vented the Pocahontas story sixteen years after he alleged it to have occurred, in order to gratify his love of notoriety. Since he had left Virginia, Pocahontas had married John Rolfe, an Englishman. In 1616 she had vis-ited England, and had been received at court and in Asactiv as a roval princess. In the need England, and had been received at court and in searcity as a royal princess. In the pext book he wrote on Virginia, Smith could not resist the temptation to connect her name with his, and he would do it in a manner creditable to both. How could it better be done than by her saving his life in 1608? She was dead, and could not deny it. Other wir-nesses who, might he questioned were was dead, and could not deny it. Other wit-nesses who might be questioned were dead or were inaccessible. The only trouble he had was that he had never told the story before. But this could be ar-nanged. He would write a letter of similar tenor to Queen Anne (who was also dead), giving it the date of 1616, and would print it with the story theory the scheme was a subwith the story itself. The scheme was a success; for it has given the legend plausibility, and to minds like Mr. John Esten Cooke's, confirmation. Shall we censure the gallant captain for indulging in this harmless way his personal vanity, and conforming to a custom of his day 97 custom of his day niacty days and confining them to a bread and water diet. The governor holds that imprisonment for that period on the diet prescribed would be "grued and unusual, and thereby violates the constitutional provision which forbids the infliction of cruel and unusual punjshuents." QUESTION ABOUT Brown's Iron Bitters

SHARESFEARS's name, it is now declared, was written "Shakspear" by the great dramatist. His sutograph is so written on the fly leaf of a volume of Shakespeare's comedies and tragedies published in 1062. The volume was once owned by the Rev. John Ward, Vicar of Stratford-on-Avon in Shakespeare's time, and was brought to this country by an early Mormon settler in Illinois.

Illinois. PRESIDENT CLEVELAND has been urged by friends to abandon his habit of devoting late hours to official business, or in some way to decrease his work. It is said that with the exception of seven hours of sleep, one for a drive, and two for meals, his entire time is devoted to work. Unusual eneroach-ments upon his time by callers only cause more incessant work in the midnight hours. On more than one occasion he has detained at the White House until two a. m. members of the cabinet with whom he had business.

Making Money Out of the Pedestal.

A recent subscriber to the Bartholdi Pedesta und, gave #19, and when asked why he did not make it an even $20, explained : "By giving what I did I cleared just $5. I had a touch o malaria not long ago, and in the ordinary course of events it would have cost me #25 for a doc-tor's bill. I bought at my grocer's a bottle of DEFFY'S PURE MALT WHISKEY for a dollar, and was speedily cured. So you see, I saved $24 by going to a grocer instead of a doctor, out of which I deduct $5 as a premium on my sagacity and the remainder 1 gratefully give to help Liberty enlighten the world."

This Tennyson, of "Locksley Hall" and "In Memoriam," of "Marianna" and "The Princess," whose " Bugle Song ' comes down the years and sets " the wild echoes flying "-this is the Tennyson whom literature will love and cherish ; while it will try and forget such effusions as that which the cable brings us now.

The Beef Problem.

The Philadelphia Times asks why beef is high ; and accounts for it by its discovery that there was a decrease in the number of cattle in the country last year. It says that New England and the Middle states lost over twenty-seven thousand head, and Texas nearly a hundred thousand ; while there was a gain in the Western states of only ninety thousand. If these statistics are true, they would properly account' for an increase in the price of beef cattle. They may be true ; we know nothing about them. What we do know, however, and what our suffering attle feeders all know to their sorrow, is that fat cattle are exceedingly low in price. They have not been so low for many a year. The farmer in this county gets a less price per pound this spring for the cattle that he has fed through the winter, than he paid for them last fall. He has to sell for about five cents per pound, or keep them over for mer grazing ; which all will do who have the pasture.

The Times man has been fitting his facts to his statistics. His inquiry should be why beef gattle are so low when they are so scince. Should like to know why it is ourselves. The seemingly is no good reason for it. But there must be a sufficient one or the fact would not be thus. We can only suppose that beef cattle have come down in sympathy with everything else ; and the fact that they have come down when and the net that they nated one down when they should stay up, afords strong evi-dence of the artificial haracter of our markets and of the probability of an early spring tide in price.

The Magwump House.

NOTHING affords more convincing proof of the vastness of this country than the startling divergence in weather reports in different parts of the United States. Thursday furnished a notable illustration of this. At White River Junction, Vermont, the thermometer registered 92 degrees in the shade at 11 o'clock in the morning, and 91 at four o'clock in the afternoon. On Wednesday the temperature was 90 at two o'clock in the afternood. Back from the Connecticut and White rivers a tew miles, the roads are almost impassable from snow and mud. In Gainesville, Texas, and its immediate vicinity, there were thirteen inches of rainfall, followed by floods of the most disastrous character. Further to the northwest, Colorado was visited by the heaviest snow storm ever known in that section of the country. Fully twenty inches of snow fell, as much as the aggregate of the previous falls of the whole winter Certainly a country that can boast of these varying atmospheric conditions, all within the same twenty-four hours, far eclipses that nation whose greatest glory is that the sun never sets within its dominions.

YESTERDAY was Shakespeare's birthday, too. Baron Tennyson and the London Times ought to have had some respect for that. ---

THERE are some unpretending societies in New York and other large cities that do a world of good in directing parentless children into the way of making an honorable livelihood. This is the season of the year when they are best enabled to enjoy the fruit of their work, for at this time the boys that crowd the newsboys' lodging houses and other places where the friendless youth of a great city congregate, are most sought after by farmers and other employers of labor who desire workers a little used already to rubbing against the rough corners of the world. It is a work of charity to hire these young people and give them a chance at self-better ment. The secretary of the Children's Aid society, of New York, writes : "All employers of labor desiring to aid this benevo-lent,work will please write to Mr. C. O'Connor, superintendent of the Newsboys' Lodging-House, 13 New Chambers street, New York, Capt. Mathews, 314 East 35th street, New York, or to W. J. McCully, supt. 300 7th avenue, New York, stating the particulars in regard to the boys whom they would employ; their address, with the name of the town and county, and the best means of reaching the place; also, what portion of the railroad fares they are willing to pay."

custom of his day?" Certainly not. We begrudge the gallant captain no harmless vanity, but we are glad that we studied history before the legend was exploded, because the page of the book which was embellished with a wood-cut of Powhatan, Pocahoutas, Smith and the In-dian executioners is the best-remebered of all, how dry the younger generation and the How dry the younger generation must history with all the juice squeezed out.

HARD ON JUDGE HANNA.

An Indianian Sums Up the Honors and Draw backs of the Persian Mission.

"I tell you, it doesn't look right," said an Indiana man in Washington the other day "to ask Judge Hanna to represent this gov ernment in a country where the people ride about in sedan chairs. How would Judge Hanna look, now, sailing along the moun-tains in a chair? It isn't dignified, and doesn't become a state which gave you your vice president in 1876 and in 1884. That isn't all. It just costs $700 for the transportation of each adult from New York to Persia and $350 for every child. Therefore the judge would be required to spend $2,500 of his own money to reach his mission and a similar amount to return or one year's salary. If he should want to come home to vote, it would require a special appropriation by the Indiana logislature, and he would have to start about Christmas in order to reach Indiana on time. Call you this remembering of your friends ?? Call you this remembering of your friends? "Will Judge Hanna accept the appoint

"Will Judge Hanna accept the appoint-ment?" "I don't know. He has too much respect for Secretary Bayard and too much regard for President Cloveland to manifest any other feeling than that of calm deliberation over the honors extended. But do you know," suddenly asked the Indiana man in a color transitions with emotion. "why we know," suddenly asked the Indiana man in a voice tremulous with emotion, "why we have a minister resident and consul general at Persia? For no other reason than to stand guard over the missionaries. Think what a figure Judge Hanna would cut in that par-ticular line of diplomacy. I have been in-vestigating the history of that mission, and I find it was established whon Minister Foster, now representing this government in Spain, was minister to Russia, and the debates in Congress allege it was for no other reason than to have a protectorate for missionaries. If you can imagine anything more ludicrous than an Indiana man—stout, healthy and worldly-minded—being carried in a chair over the mountains of Persia and sitting down in the hot streets of Teheran as a com-panion of devout churchmen for four solid years, you must have an extensive imagina-tion."

Somebody else has been telling Judge H. that in order to get to his new post of duty he will have to ride 700 miles on a camel; and altogether he is not very enthusiasti over his prospects.

MISS LOUISA M. ALCOTT received thirty treatments of the mind cure, and then, as she says, "returned to the homoepathy and massage from which I had been lured by the hope of finding a short and easy way to undo in a month the overwork of twenty years." CADET ULYSSES SIMPSON GRANT had a very narrow chance for remaining at the West Point academy. There was a time in his cadet career when had 'he once more failed to polish his shoes, the number of de-merits would have expelled him from the seedenve. cademy.

ELLEN TERRY has been three times mar-ried. First, to Watts, the artist; second, to Waddell, to whom she bore a son, and third, to Charles Kelly. Watts applied, for and obtained a divorse from her; she did the same jowards Waddell, and Charles Kelly has just died of pneumonia. Gov. RUSE, of Wisconsin, vetoed the bill providing for the sentence of vagrants for
