A Dolorous Howl.

The Blaine organs, one and all, headed by the Tribune and Philadelphia Press, seem to have got their orders to unroll the bloody shirt.

When Grant called Akerman into his cabinet and distinguished Longstreet; when Hayes made Key postmaster general, and had his wife introduced to a Southern audience, leaning on the arm of a man who should have been under a Union soldier's feet, because the rope was not long enough to hang him; when Mosby, the guerrilla, was sent by a Republican administration to Hong Kong, and the whole party sold what was left of its birthright to Mahone—the super-loyal party of great moral ideas estopped itself from objecting to ex-Confederates in office; and it can only hurt itself by renewing a faded and ragged old issue.

But let it keep at it. The administration will keep on its way. Most of the men of mature age and fit talent in the South were in the rebel army; and they are now reconstructed citizens of that section, and loyal adherents of the government. They are more to be trusted than some of the loud-mouthed fellows who followed the Northern armies, mostly behind the baggage wagons. The president has just said that no one-legged Union soldier, doing his duty, shall be removed; and reports of the death of the Union and the offer to Rosecrans, show that true soldiers who are true men are not to be overlooked.

It pleases the Blaine organs to howl. Let them howl.

Four of the New Era's political friends had a bar-room altercation three weeks ago, which, occurring within doors, was in some mysterious way kept from the reporters of all the city papers, until as a matter of news they assumed that it had become stale, flat and unprofitable.

The New Era, however, which has at last found out, uses it now to point the moral of a warning, that its rule to overlook a young man's first escapade, on promise to keep out of bad company and bad habits in the future, will not apply to officials elected to administer justice or handle the public money, or who are entrusted with any other official responsibility to the public.

And our more or less esteemed contemporary proves that it means what it says, by not only deliberately suppressing the names of those engaged in what it calls "a very disgraceful scene and breach of the peace," but by indulging in vague innuendoes, which reflect upon every arduous in the city and leave it to be suspected that almost anybody "directly and officially," or even "indirectly" connected with the city might have been involved in it.

If the New Era thinks "a disgraceful breach of the peace among officials"—even those who are "under bonds" to the New Era, rather than to the public or their own self-respect—deserves the "penalty of exposure," as it certainly does, why deny their organ or not inflict the penalty upon the guilty, instead of casting the drag net of suspicion over the unoffending?

If Alderman Barr and City Treasurer Myers had an altercation, and Water Supt. Halbach and his Assistant Supt. Huber interfered to stop it, whatever was disgraceful in the matter attaches to them individually, and to them only. There is no reason either for "officers of the law" nor police journals to condone their offense; much less to distribute it over other officials who may come within the New Era's classification.

Interpretation Wanted.

The very excellent majority of the Pennsylvania state Senate have no stomach for the passage of an anti-free pass bill. Notwithstanding the constitution of Pennsylvania—which is the supreme law of the commonwealth, that all of these senators swore to support, without reservation we hope—prohibits the issue of free passes, and commands the legislature to enforce the prohibition by appropriate legislation, a majority of the Senate refuses to enact the necessary laws.

Among the recalcitrants are some Democrats, accounted worthy and estimable men in the fellowship to which are specially committed by tradition and principle the preservation and enforcement of the constitution. One of these, Mr. Biddis, claims for every man the right of private interpretation. He would do well to explain to a yearning people how to interpret the constitution to warrant the issue of free passes or to justify the legislature in not suppressing their issue.

The World Moves.

In Massachusetts they are trying some preachers for holding religious services on the commons on Sunday. It is testified to their disadvantage that they were seen and heard on the commons, engaged in both preaching and singing to some 400 or 500 persons; there was no disturbance; the audience was made up of middle class people.

It used to be that up in Massachusetts the preachers were tried for not preaching, and the people were disciplined for not listening.

THE GREAT FRENCH POET AND NOVELIST IS DEAD.

Victor Hugo died at 1:30 P. M. to-day.

Mario Victor Hugo is one of the illustrations of literary prowess long sustained. He was a famous man when this century was in its first quarter. Born in Besancon, France, February 26, 1802, his early education was chiefly obtained in private schools.
