Fallibility of the Banks.

The explosion of the Shackamaxon bank and the defalcation in the Manhattan bank serve to strengthen the distrust, which nts of late years have sufficed abundantly to cause, in the security of bank des. The man with money seems to have no place to rest it where he may be sure to find it again. He loses it in his ss, in his investments, in his bank and in his stocking. There is no place where thieves may not break through and steal now. This is an experience as old as man, and pointed the scriptural injunction to lay up wealth where neither moth, nor rust, nor thieves may seize upon it. The high price of bank stocks and the magnitude of bank deposits go to show the public belief that if there is any safe place for money it is in a bank. This confidence continues, seemingly, notwithstanding the bank wreckages of the past year or two; and probably the latest demonstrations of the fallibility of banks will not greatly affect it. The depositors in the Shackamaxon are likely to lose very heavily; they have been despoiled by the faithlessness of the controlling managers of the bank. The Manhattan theft will not hurt the bank's creditors because it was only $160,-000, and the concern has three millions of

But both events teach the lessor that the faithfulness of bank officers and bank directors is not to be confidently relied upon at all times and under all circumstance. The bank's vaults may be esteemed burglar proof, and yet bean open ; the bank's officers may deemed honest and yet be found otherwise; the bank's directors may be considered watchful and honorable, and yet be negligent and untrustworthy.

The head of a leading bank in New York said to a reporter the other day that there was absolutely no certain way of preventing stealing by the bank's employes, and that the devices for theft were as various as the occasions. His experience led him to frequently move his clerks from desk to desk, as the most effectual way of keeping them from the opportunity for a steady

If this is an effective treatment for the clerks and tellers it would seem be especially advisable for the president, cashier and directors; and the Shackamaxon bank teaches that if these officers had been statedly changed the bank would not have been broken. Perchance the law makers might profitably consider whether a law prescribing a term of one year for bank directors, and forbiding their re-election until after an intervening term, would not be bene

"Bogus" Arguments.

The Philadelphia Times discusses the anti-oleomargarine law with that gross and glaring superficiality which so often mars its editorial direction and lands it frequently on both sides of a public question before it is through with it. The gist of the Times editorial is that the oleomargarine people ought to have no consideration because they sell their product for what it is not and charge for it three times its actual value.

As to the first of these complaints the law now provides for that. The Times admits that "there is a law on the statute books requiring imitations of butter to be sold for what they are;" and if it be true, as it charges, that there is 'persistent violation' of this statute, why are the violations not punished and the law not enforced ? If it impossible to make this just and reasonable law operative, how can it be expected to enforce an unjust and unreasonable statute? Mereover the country is suffering infinitesimally less from imitation butter than it is from the thousands of other imitations imposed upon it, from bogus spices up to pious frauds. Why legislate against imitation butter and not against imitation pepper, sanded sugar, glucose candy, artificial stone, brass jewelry, corsets and tight shoes, news dispatches written in Philadelphia and dated from Washington, or preachers who proclaim hell-fire and believe only in shoel? If it be true that the retailers of oleo margarine sell it at an enormous profit what justification is that of the suppression of its manufacture or sale? When did the law begin to take cognizance of the profits of a private business ? The commonwealth is scandalized now at the stubborn resistance of railroad corporations—and their agents in journalism and the legislatureto the regulation by law of their freight charges; and yet it is adduced, as a reason for the extermination of the manufacture of a substitute for butter, that it can be made at third the cost of butter, and yet be made so good as to be sold in the market in competition with the real article! A parity of reasoning would suppress by law a news paper sold for two cents when a better could be had for one; and exterminate by statute a publishing company which boasted that it made 50 per cent. a year on the costs of its plant.

Live and Learn.

sible to exclude from the petit jury all who believe a murderer is not someth of a hero." In that state the Courier-Jour nal reports that "murders grow apace; the victims are forgotten; the murderers become heroes to be protected by every imaginary legal contrivance." This is what the INTELLIGENCER thought some years ago when Phil Thompson in cold blood shot a fleeing and defenseless man in the back. But it was the humor of Kentucky society to protect him and of Kentucky journalism to praise him.

He came to Congress with blood on his hands; and Mr. Watterson and his newspaper recently urged him violently for a place in the administration second only to cabinet office.

We can all live and learn, even the gallant, chivalrous, impulsive and accomplished editor of Mr. Watterson's great newspaper.

Out of Line.

The proceedings of the Pennsylvania state Senate yesterday are full of interest to the general public. In that bodydespite the action of the House negativing the anti-freight discrimination bill and rendering hopeless its passage this year-the Lee-Wallace bill was pressed to a vote, and the members were compelled to make a record on it. It was to have been expected that such creatures of the corporation and slaves of the ring as Cooper would go to the front in favor of any proposition to defeat or obstruct the enforcement of the constitution. From him and his wing of his party such shameless defiance of the fundamental law and aggressive attacks upon the rights of the people may always be confidently looked

Of the Democratic senators, Messrs. Biddis and McAteer boldly voted to indefi nitely postpone the bill; Senator Hall failed to put himself on the record, and some of the Democrats who were right yes terday are said to be more or less weak kneed on the main question.

Each of these of our party brethren no doubt feels able to take care of himself; and with them their constituents will no doubt in due time deal as seems fit to them. But we warn them all that Senator Wallace spoke with the voice of prophecy as well as leadership when he forecast the importance of this great question in the future campaigns of Pennsylvania politics. Year in and year out the Democratic platforms of Pennsylvania have demanded legislation to enforce the corporation articles of the constitution. This declaration is written in every recent deliverance of the party in convention assembled; and with every succeeding year popular conviction on the subject has strengthened and popular interest has increased. Who is not with the people on this subject is against the Pamesratic party. There is no escape from this position.

Is it is going to rive the English heart to lose Mr. Lowell, we will make a violent effort to jog along without him.

THERE is much of interest in the eighth annual report of the Children's Country Week association, of Philadelphia, which has just been published. The object of this association is to enable poor children and poor invalid adults of the city to spend a part of the warm months in the country; to provide free excursions for them; and where it is possible to secure for them permanent homes in the country. Some idea of the extent of the work that is annually accomdished by this benevolent body may t obtained by a glance at the treasurer's re port which shows receipts from membership dues, contributors, etc., for the past year, of nearly $9,000; all of which, with the exception of about $350, was spent with the object of affording to the poor of Philadelphia a chance for much needed fresh air and recreation. "Care is taken to send good children to fill invitations and we seldom have complaint from entertainers;" so the report reads. This seems to be the only weak place in the armor of the association. For it is those not professedly good who would be most benefitted by a week or two away from the crowded city slums with their criminal suggestiveness. But as the association grows, its policy may broaden. At any rate, it has done much good in its brief career, and deserves the encouragement of all those who have the well-being of humanity at heart. It is mysterious that there are no great women musical composers; but in the melody that is evoked by the chin many of the sex are more than great.

THE Pennsylvania Hospital for Insane in Philadelphia is one of the leading institutions of its kind in the world. The perfection of its method of treating those whose bodies have, for a time or permanently, survived the stability of their minds, was largely ttained under the late Dr. Thomas L. Kirkbride, whose fame as a specialist in the treatment of diseases of the mind is more than national; and his successor, Dr. John B. Chapin, seems fairly entitled to wear the mantle of his illustrious predecessor. The one hundred and thirty-fourth year of its existence show the institution having now within its walls 365 insane patients, 166 males and 199 females. The result of its treatment are seen in the recovery of 51 patients, and the improvement of 84, from Jan. 1st, 1884, to April 27, 1885. Since the opening of the hospital 8,688 cases have been treated, 4,099 of whom recovered and 2,273 were reported improved, illustrating that with any kind of care two-thirds of the people who lose their minds may have their condition ameliorated. The fact, however, seems well established by statistics that the insane must be taken in hand at the early stage of their disease. Of those discharged from the Pennsylvania hospital during the past year, seventy-four per cent. had been insane three months or less prior to admission. So far as the occupations of the patients are concerned, it appears that out of the 4,869 males who have been at the institution since its foundation 567 were clerks, 505 farmers, 469 merchants, 349 laborers, 157 carpenters, 117 lawyers, and so on down to boat-builders, gold-beaters, firemen, coppersmiths and soap-makers, each of which occupation had but one representa-tive. It is a significant fact that there were interpreted by the envious to mean that editors have no brains to lose. Among the 4,186 females, domestics lead the list with 358, followed by seamstresses, 351, teachers being next at 119. Dr. Charles M. Franklin, son of the late Thomas E. Franklin, of this city, is second assistant physician at the institution.

MR. ROSSICO CONKLING is getting fat; possibly because he has flung away political ambition.

MR. R. B. HAYES has sold his Omaha beer saloon; at less than its value, he says. But the fact is the business declined after it was found out that Hayes owned the place.

THOSE who look upon the Chinamen as laundrymen and little more may be a little surprised to learn that they had a newspaper Mr. Watterson's Courier-Journal, moved by some recent events in its native state, frankly owns that "our heroes in Kentucky are the murderers." "We pet them and 'humor them and strive not to hurt their feelings. The grand juries show them great consideration, and we make it

NEW ORLEANS ETCHINGS.

The approach to New Orleans by box shows the city and surrounding country to greater advantage than arrival by train. Both banks of the Mississippi are picturesque for a hundred miles above with a succession of sugar, cotton, tobacco and rice plantations resembling a continuous village, and if one is fortunate enough to pass the Exposition grounds at night in time to enjoy the bril-liant electrical illumination, gorgeous fireworks and distant music, he may congratulate himself upon having selected the slow but comfortable motion of the tortoise in preference to the more popular lightning

The Mississippi river steamers usually land at the foot of Canal street, the Central avenue of New Orleans, dividing the American from the French quarter of the town, and so called from its use in former years as a drainage canal to Lake Pontchar-train. Most of the streets here retain their primitive names—Bienville and Carondelet, Dumaine, Dauphine, Burgundy, Royale and Baronne recall the history of New Orleans under French and Spanish dominion, whilst Rampart street marks the destroyed walls of the old city, and Esplanade street indicates the military parade ground of past times. Now it is a beautiful wide avenue, several Now it is a beautiful wide avenue, several miles in length, with green sward and rows of tail trees down its centre, while its broad banquettes and handsome residences, with tropical surroundings of bananas, oranges, pomegranates, figs and oleanders render this Creole Faubourg a fair rival of the Garden district above Canal street. Esplanade street is not, however, monopo lized entirely by the French; many Americans prefer this quarter of the town, and on the banquettes one often hears the English tongue; indeed, it is spoken with especial cleverness and charming intonations (so says Monsignor Capel), in an old American home, which covers much ground on the corner of Bourbon and Esplanade streets-a stately mansion with wide halls, high ceilings and ancient adornments. The best and most talented people of the South, and many from the North and Europe, have here en joyed hospitality; and to the city of New Orleans the generous host many years since presented a valuable library of 6,000 volumes, which is known as the Fisk Free Library, and is now owned by the University of Louisiana, and enjoyed by the public The private collection of volumes at the old home is still intact, although it has passed through the dangers of war and is extensive enough to excite the scorn of the gray-haired waiter against all book agents whic call. Such visitors are rarely admitted, for Davy insists that "Dah ain't no book ever written what's not in our libray. ancient colored retainer has served the family for many years, and is therefore a autocrat in the house. He is wonderful to behold on Sunday in his high hat, dress suit and embroidered waistcoat, which has a history, and has been treasured by him for thirty years. His wife, Aunt Hennie, is equally loyal and the best of nurses. This old couple have a house and a little property of their own which they often visit, but prefer to live with their former owners and children they have guarded in infancy.

A strong bond of affection exists between outherners and the r family servants which the Northerner cannot fully appreciate. After the emancipation proclamation many of the slaves remained in their old homes, as faithful and devoted in their allegiance as ever, and some even declined regular wages, preferring to accept only such gifts as could be made them by their impoverished masters An example of such an attachment is shown in the Louisiana exhibit at the Exposition. It is a portrait painted from life in 1857, by a lady of this stat , in grateful recognition of the kind services of her hurse. Anna leandre, a mulatto woman, belonging to Mrs. Ursin Soniat du Fossat, This servant refused to accept her liberty under the emancipation act and accompanied her mistress to France. Her fidelity was such as to attract the attention of the French government, which pre-sented her with the cross of honor, in Paris, May 22d, 1881.

Louisiana has on exhibition an interesting MORE NEW GOODS. tion-an old slave bell, which for many years called the negroes to work on this estate The property has a front of nine miles on Lake Pontchartrain and was originally owned by Bernard de Mariguy, a wealthy Creole planter, who entertained Louis Phil lippe when he visited Louisiana, and was in turn received by him with distinguished honors at the court of France. Tradition has it that one thousand Spanish dollars were dropped by Monsieur de Mariguy into the molten metal of which this bell was cast. It was remarkable for its mellow tone, which, under favorable circumstances, could be heard in New Orleans, across the waters of Lake Pontchartrain. It is handsomely inscribed and ornamented with scroll and figure work, and not unlike the Old Liberty hell in general arrestrance, having a similar bell in general appearance, having a similar crack in its side. The slaves of the planta-tion assert that on the morning of President Lincoln's emancipation proclamation this old relic of slavery fell from its supports and rent the fissure in its side which forever sienced its silvery tongue. STONEWALL JACKSON'S DAUGHTER.

Her Brilliant Marriage in Richmond—Remen bered by Her Father's Friends. Miss Julia T. Jackson, only daughter of the late General Stonewall Jackson, was married Tuesday night, in the Second Presbyterian church, Richmond Va., to Mr. William E. Christian, a young merchant of that city. The wedding was the greatest event of the social season. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. Moses D. Hoge, who conducted the funeral services of the bride's father at the time when she was an infant. Long before the time for the wedding the street in front of the church was crowded and many went away unable to obtain admittance. The bride is a bright and pretty blonde and very popular, as is the groom. After the ceremony a reception was groom. After the ceremony a reception was given the bridal party. The couple left on the night train for the South. The presents were numerous and beautiful. General Joseph E. Johnston, General Jubal A. Early and other prominent ex-Confederate soldiers being among the givers. The most costly present was from W. W. Corcoran, of Washington, D. C., a fruit set of solid gold.

The survivors of the Third Alabama regiment, which served in Gen. Jackson's comment.

The survivors of the Third Alabama regiment, which served in Gen. Jackson's command, sent the bride a handsome present, consisting of a silver service of spoons and forks, halt dozen large spoons, half dozen forks and a dozen teaspoons. Each article is engraved with the initials of the young lady, "J. T. J." The present is inclosed in a beautiful satin-lined box, and on the outside of the case is placed a shield of silver bearing the inscription: "Julia T. Jackson, from the surviving members of the Third Alabama, A. N. V." A note accompanying the present asks Miss bers of the Third Alabama, A. N. V." A note accompanying the present asks Miss Jackson "to accept the present asks Miss Jackson "to accept the present as a slight testimonial of the esteem in which she is held," and with it is coupled the assurance "that the memory of her immortal father is still fresh in the heart of every member of the Third Alabama Regiment." The Mobile Rifle Company also forwarded Miss Jackson a present. It consists of a dyzen handpainted fruit dishes, Limoges manufacture, neatly inclossed in a large satin-lined case. A ribbon of green and gold was placed across the inside of the lid of the case, bearing the name of the company and the name of the lady to whom the present is made. With the best wishes for a bright and happy future the Riflemen inform Miss Jackson that their present is designed to "convey some evidence of their fond remembrance and high esteem which they bear for her and her noble ancestry."

SPECIAL NOTICES.

Queer reading would be the history of names. We cannot, however we go into the subject gov except so far as to say that Dr. Kinnedy's "Favorite Remedy" was called by hat name, in an informal fashion, long before the Doctor treamed of advertising it for public use. Speak ing of it he would say to his patients, " This is my favorite remedy for all troubles of the blood," etc., and its success was so great that he finally spelled the name with capital letters.
