LANCASTER, JUNE 10, 1885.

Shall Insurance Insure? The Harrisburg Patriot thinks that the House made a mistake in passing the bill requiring insurance companies to pay the full amount of the policy in case of a total loss of the property insured. The Patriol thinks that the result of such a law would be to encourage arson, as persons would insure their property above its value and fire it to recover the insurance money.

But like most questions, this one has two ides to it, and we incline to the opinion that the House has the right side of it.

It is true that arson will grow under a law which encourages the insuring of property above its value. But is this such a law? Will not its effect be to induce insurance companies to determine the value of the property they insure before insuring it? At present they pay too little attention to this inquiry. The greater the amount of insurance the greater the amount of the premium they receive. They are disposed to accept a party's own valuation of his property, to a great extent, and to rely upon their adjusters' ability, in case of a loss, to reduce the value of the property destroyed. The consequence is that the property owner is incited to arson because of the excessive insurance given him; and though he finds, after the fire, that his insurance is not what he thought it was, and that the company has been too sharp for him, the information comes too late to save the crise; and the more expert and effenced class of incendiaries, who are acquainted with the facilities possessed by the company for reducing the amount of their insurance losses, are yet not deterred thereby, because they have tricks of their own by which they beat the companies, the favorite one being to secretly reduce their stock of goods before the burning. This device they can employ against the companies, whatever their care may be in examining into the value of the property included in the insurance premium

The objection we have to the present practice, by which insurance companies charge a preimum for a loss which they refuse to pay when it comes, is that it is not honest; and that it subjects honest insurers to great annoyance and loss. An insurance company, like an individual, should pay for what it gets. If it is paid for an insurance of $1,000, and the thing insured is totally destroyed, it should not be then allowed to say that it was not worth $1,000, unless it can show that the property had depreciated in value since it was insured. The question of value at the time of insurance should be settled at that time, and when the money is paid for it. The company has then a better opportunity to determine the value of the property than after it is burned. It should be compelled by the law to settle the value then, and not be permitted to dispute it when it is called upon to pay it, and after it has probably received for many years the sum of money which it deemed adequate to compensate it for the risk it assumed.

Insurance, no doubt, stimulates arson. There would be much less burning if there was no insurance. It is quite probable that a true public policy would forbid any insurance of property. The result would not only diminish incendiarism, but it would cause the erection of indestructible buildings that would insure themselves against destruction. But, while we have insurance companies, let them be held to a proper scrutiny of their business and a prompt and full adjustment of their liabilities, and be forbid the sneaking from their losses to which they so greatly incline.

A Fictitious Factiousness. The Philadelphia Press correspondent from Harrisburg has a fictitious interview with an imaginary Democrat who reports Gov. Pattison appearing before the president of the United States to give his "ideas and theories as to how Democratic patronage should be dispensed in the Keystone state;" whereupon the president lectured him upon the folly of the "factions" among the Democracy of this state, and threatened to "take care that no faction has cause to complain of favoritism; wherefor, this correspondent relates, the "warring leaders" have made a treaty of peace in order to promote "the distribution of the offices!"

Of course no such conversation between the president of the United States and the governor of Pennsylvania ever took place; no such conditions as he represents exist, no such war has been raging and no such treaty has been signed. It needs only a glance at the president's disposition of the ointments thus far made in Pennsylvania to demonstrate this. The most conspicuous of these have been those of Malcolm Hay, E. A. Bigler, Robert E. James and Daniel M. Fox. We should like to know what strife of factions or war of leaders these men represent. They meet with very general favor, excite no discord and awaken neither factious pride nor distrust.

There has been nothing in the course of events in this or any other state to justify the faintest suspicion that the president is run by any close corporation; that his appointments have been dominated by any clique or directed in any particular interest. If there are factions at present in the Pennsylvania Democracy we should like to know what are the lines which separate them

The party conventions since 1880 have been singularly free from them. If there are leaders at war it is very certain they are without followers in their internecine

The president, no doubt, has to hear a good deal of recrimination and see a good many exhibitions of petty jealousy among the rival politicians from our state, from his own state and from all others, but it is not at all likely-nay, the contrary is very manifest—that he is not moved by it at all. He knows that the party masses have no sympathy with these quarrels and that he can always overlook them and find fit men who are not involved in them. He seems to be looking for the best administrative agents, and is not anxious to reward the friends of one man nor to punish the enemies of another. And he is getting along. It would be a rash man who would exhibit the temerity of acusing him of working in any faction's interest or warn him against being controlled by any such narrow policy.

Our New Collector.

The Democrats of Lancaster county, and indeed its business men and citizens generally, have every reason to be gratified that the appointment by the president of the collector of internal revenue in this district determines the retention of that official in Lancaster county, which has the largest population and the most extensive revenue business in the district.

Moreover the large Democratic vote of this county, equalled by that of few other counties in the state, without considerable representation in public office, is properly complimented and fitly honored in the selection of one of its foremost representatives for so important a place, the duties of which extend over a dozen counties. Our neighbors and brethren in York will hardly begrudge this bestowal of executive favor.

Lancaster county was lucky, too, in pre senting a number of excellent candidates. none of whom demeaned himself by undue seeking of the place nor by a dog-h,-themanger policy of exciting strife and jealousy, which would have been disastrous to

It need hardly be said that the appointment was made upon a fair and full examination of the merits of the names laid before the president, guided by his conscientious desire to select one who would bring to the office administrative ability, tried integrity and business capacity, and who would give to the discharge of its duties that exclusive attention which their large importance requires. In the group of names from which the selection was made it would have been difficulty to have erred, and, seeing that only one could be taken, none will more cheerfully acquiesce in the excellence of the president's final choice than those who stood in ikelihood of being the same. To this community over which he presided for seven years as chief magistrate, with rare ability, energy and fidelity to every official trust, no introduction is needed for John T. Mac-Gonigle.

It Will Not Do.

The Philadelphia Bulletin gravely declares that that city is indebted to Sheriff Keim nearly $22,000, "the business of the office having fallen off during the term to such an extent as to make it impossible for insured; and the risk of it is taken ac- him to secure his salary under the peculiar count of in the "moral hazard," which is laws now in force"; and it declares that are worth any consideration. Gov. Pattison ought to sign some kind of a bill which the legislature has passed for his relief.

This view from an intelligent newspaper is incomprehensible. When Keim took his office he took the risk of its business slacking off and of the fees not making up the amount of his salary; he knew the law and accepted its provisions and certainly when the fees shrank it was in the power of the sheriff, acting with the commissioners, to effect a corresponding decrease of expenses so as to always give him a fair salary.

It is the practice of officials working under the salary law to get all the subordi nates they can, so as to absorb the fees and leave none for the county. In Philadelphia the sheriff overreached himself by having a larger force of appointees than the business and fees of the office war rant; but that is his own lookout. The policy of the law is against increasing or decreasing salaries or emoluments of an official while he is in office, and we have no idea that the governor will sign a bill so plainly controverting the whole tenor of the fundamental law.

A Good Suggestion.

The Philadelphia Times gives good advice to the committee of councils sitting upon the railroad question. It reminds it that there is a unanimous opinion that the new railroad should come in and that all that is to be determined is the question of the best route by which it shall come in, judged from the city's standpoint. This being mainly a question of engineering, the two engineers in the service of the city should put in charge of the matter to make an examination and recommendation as to the route, and the Times proposes that they shall be assisted by the chief engineers of the Pennsylvania, Baltimore & Ohio and Reading railroads. The suggestion is good. The people have confidence in the good sense and judgment of Chief Engineer Ludlow, of the water department, and what

as they can get. WE do not understand the wholesale and nearly unanimous passage of the appropriations which the governor vetoed. Certainly such action was not worthy of the House, as it was not merited by the character of the governor's objections, which were generally sound. The House seems to have intended to smite the governor;

he recommends will be about as near right instead of which it very heavily struck itself. If the members of the legislature believe that they can hurt the governor and help themselves by squandering the public moneys, among the capitol employes of all grades, beyond a fair compensation for their labors during the session, and beyond the sums given them as wages by the law, they will be very likely to find themselves mistaken. We are thoroughly ashamed of and disgusted with the conduct of the many Democrats in the House, which on this and other occasion has been indefensible and has earned them the contempt of their con-

EX-ASSISTANT TREASURER GRAVES SAVS that the tressury department could be efficiently operated with a greater reduction than 25 per cent. of the clerical force; that is, if the loafers could be dismissed and workers substituted for them. On the question of feminine service in the departments he has strong views. He says; "I do not think the employment of women in the departments has been a benefit to the government. As a rule, men are better able to do severe clerical labor than women." Much hardship would result if this means of making a living were

THE Philadelphia board of public education very sensibly recognizes that the new school law requiring physiology and hygiene to be taught in all the schools to all the scholars does not compel their universal instruction from text books. Hence the city board directs that lessons in personal health, cleanliness and the effects of the use of alco hol and narcotics be given orally, and only in classes above the eighth grade text books will be used. This complies with the letter of the law, and is all that its spirit demands, possibly even more than the present school system is capable of doing.

WHITELAW REID says: "The political generals of the Republican party are disposed negative sort of an administration." The settling of the Central American troubles. the squelching of the Oklahoma boomers. the forcing John Roach to live up to his con tract, the discharge of a host of unnecessary officials in the Washington departments—all these may be "mild and negative" acts; but they are the kind that win golden opinions from all the honest and patriotic people of the country.

IT is a sad coincidence that the appointment of ex-Mayor Fox to the first important federal office, in Philadelphia, comes con temporaneously with the death of his wife As the Record, which opposed his appoint ment, with great delicacy says, he find small consolation in the honor conferred upon him by his appointment to an important position in the federal service for the domestic affliction which has concurrently overtaken him. The death of his wife wil bring to him the sympathy of every consid erate heart." The general tone of the Philadelphia press upon the appointment r highly eulogistic and considerate.

THE example that President Cleveland sets in the matter of refusing passes may be heartily commended to the legislators, judges and others who accept favors from railroad companies, though knowing that they may some day be called upon to decide between them and the people, whom they have sworn to faithfully represent. The president paid his way to Gettysburg on the ecasion of his recent visit to the famous battle-field, and when he went to New York on Decoration Day his railroad ticket was bought like that of any other citizen who rides without a pass. He might have a special train with scarcely the asking, for railroad companies well recognize the advertisement their roads receive when traveled over by such a distinguished personage as the chief executive of the country. Cleveland receives a large enough salary to be above the necessity of accepting favors from corporations, and in his determination to pay his own way as he goes, he will merit the admiration and earn the respect of all citizens whose opinions

MR. FAWCETT, the late postmaster-general of England, when he returned to health after lying for a time at death's door, stated that his illness had at last freed him from the fear of death. In the most serious part of his trouble he felt no anxiety, and did not fear, as he had in health, that the end would be preceded by in health, that the end would be preceded by great pain or a severe struggle. He felt that his heart would slowly and, without his knowledge, cease to beat.

His solicitors have therefore published a letter stating that these letters are forgeries, and that they have traced nearly three hundred such, comprising not only communications to the press, but social invitations, letters of introduction, orders to florists and other tradesmen.

Hawthorne's Modesty.

From the Providence Journal, I once saw Hawthorne under circumstance which had a touch of the ludierous. It was at a commencement dinner given under a tent on the "campus" of Bowdoin college, of which institution it will be remembered, he was a graduate in 1825, Longtellow being his classmate. Hawthorne had secured the his classmate. Hawthorne had secured the high place which he ever after held in the republic of letters, and it was deemed a great thing that his presence had been secured to grace the festive occasion. When the time came for the speeches, everybody rejoiced at the prospect of hearing Hawthorne. Bowdoin was justiy proud of her gifted son, and to see him, and especially to listen to him, was an event not soon to be forgotten. In fitting terms the president, Leonard Woods, jr., if my memory serves me right, announced the next speaker, our distinguished son and most welcome guest, and, as he proceeded in his laudatory terms, naturally all eyes were turned away for the moment from the guest to the speaking host.

Finishing his remarks, the president called for a speech from Nathaniel Hawthorne. Everybody looked to the spot where just now "the distinguished son and welcome guest" had been sitting. But he was not there. While the president had been lavishly pouring out his praises, and extolling the wonderful gifts of this alma mater, he had quietly lifted the canvas of the tent, crept out and "gone to parts unknown." My recollection is that there was a good laugh over the matter, and ever body said it was just like Hawthorne, who creaded making an after-dinner speech more even than he did the critics. His constitutional shyness never forzook him high place which he ever after held in the

Cleveland Meets His Old Teacher

N. Y. Herald Washington Correspondence.
The Iowa Editorial association called to pay their respects on Monday. They were rather a fine-looking body of men, but no one would ever take them for editors. The one would ever take them for editors. The majority of them publish weekly papers, on which they act as editors, publishers, reporters and business managers combined. Among the party was Mr. J. W. Hubbard, now an editor of a thriving paper. Mr. Hubbard was a teacher of a grammar school in Clinton, N. Y., a number of years ago, when President Cleveland was one of his pupils.

The president has not seen Mr. Hubbard since he left his school, but he immediately recognized him as he passed along in the line paying his respects. The meeting between the former school teacher and his distinguished pupil was an interesting one. They spent some time in a pleasant chat during guished pupil was an interesting one. They spent some time in a pleasant chat, during which the president invited Mr. Hubbard to call on him informally at the White House during his stay in this city. Mr. Hubbard told some pleasant stories about the president's school days to his editorial associates. He says promptness and reliability were young Cleveland's marked characteristics, and that, while he did not master his studies as easily as did some of the other pupils, he worked hard to do so. worked hard to do so.

Labouchere on Sunday Observances. From the London Truth.

Now that this refusal to allow the little Jews of the East Fnd to play on the Christian Sunday has been made, it is to be hoped a reaction will come about, and that before long we may even see little—or, for that matter big-Christians allowed to play cricket, footbig—Christians allowed to play cricket, foot-ball and other innocent games on the first day of the week. I fancy that when the average Englishman comes to die one of his bitterest regrets must be for his misused Sundays. Fifty-two of them in every year (3,640 if he lives to 70) and all wasted—not merely badly spent, but wasted, utterly wasted! Really, the clergy ought to take the matter up and preach in favor of Sunday cricket. Put it at its very lowest, cricket is better than beer, and, for my part, I think better than beer, and, for my part, I think even beer is better than that downright vacuity and sloth, that mere doing nothing, in which so many grown-up people and so many children in this country now pass the first day of the week.

Randall Scores a Point for Honesty. The appointment of Dr. Miller as commis sioner of internal Revenue scores one for Mr. Randall for his courageous fight against treasury corruption. The effect on future revenue reform must be excellent. It is admitted that demoralization in whiskey circles never would have occurred if it had all been of a class that could be safely used for family and medicinal purposes, like Duppy's Purk Malt Whiskey which is absolutely and entirely free from the fusil off so common in ordinary brands. All eading druggists and grocers sell it. The do tors recommend it for pneumonia, diphtheria malaria, and all pulmonary diseases.

Now, neighbor, you seem to want a general fixing up, and the thing to do it is Brown's Iron Bitters. Mr. A. J. Pickrell, of Ennis, Texas, says, "I was a sickly man.
