

INTELLIGENCER.

Published every evening in the year, (Sundays excepted) by STEPHEN M. BARNES, at the INTELLIGENCER BUILDING, No. 111 North Queen Street, Lancaster, Pa.

Published every Wednesday morning, Two Dollars a Year in Advance.

Address all Letters and Telegrams to THE INTELLIGENCER, LANCASTER, PA.

LANCASTER, JULY 3, 1885.

TAMMANY HALL.

The New York Sun hints that the Louisville Courier-Journal may be somewhat too "previous" in writing the obituary of Tammany Hall, which it has found occasion to do in the fact that that Democratic association does not seem to have the favor of President Cleveland and his advisers as demonstrated in the distribution of the New York patronage. That the administration does not show very warmly upon Tammany Hall may be conceded; but then it must be remembered that there are a great many very good Democrats in the country who do not, so far, appear to be highly favored with this warmth; and they are too many in number and too valuable in quality to make it at all presumable that they are frozen into an obituary condition.

Neither Tammany Hall nor any other Democrat or association of Democrats will ever meet political death from a loss of administration favor, when they have sterling merit and sound democracy to stand upon. The editor of the Courier-Journal has a tendency to jump to conclusions upon brief occasion, which puts his judgment of men and things at a discount. He is more brilliant than sound. If Tammany Hall could reasonably be believed to be sustained upon the hope of public plunder, it would be reasonable to believe that the loss of the federal patronage, if it is lost to it, will destroy it. But there is nothing in its history upon which to base such a judgment. It is the oldest Democratic association in the country, and has always been the most vigorous. It flourished for a quarter of a century without federal patronage, and it seems silly to say that such a loss now ensures its dissolution. It is true that it seems also to have lost its grip upon the official patronage of New York city; but it has been in this situation often before; and when it is remembered that its candidate for mayor was beaten last fall by the refusal of its leader to permit the Democratic presidential ticket to be traded off for the Tammany majority ticket, it will be conceded that the strength of virtue which caused this sacrifice is not one likely to be exhibited by demoralized, moribund and undervalued men. It certainly does not lie with Democrats who profited so greatly by the honest support which Tammany Hall gave to a president whose nomination it had so earnestly opposed, when that support lost its control of the patronage of New York city, to now make that loss the foundation of a prediction that the organization is slain. Our own firm opinion is that Tammany Hall deserves and receives the appreciative thanks of the Democracy of the country for its virtuous refusal to betray it to elect its local officers; and that the association and its leader, John Kelly, stand higher to-day in the Democratic esteem than they have ever stood. No loss of federal patronage, and no failure of presidential recognition of its magnanimity, can hurt an association which has testified by its deeds that it holds its Democracy as above price, pure, honest and undefiled.

Blaine's Decedence.

Four years ago yesterday, just as his administration was beginning to develop some of the characteristics of the man and his chosen advisers, James A. Garfield, president of the United States, was shot by an insane and disappointed fellow-partisan, Charles J. Guisard. The circumstances which had produced this result are now well known to the world. The war of factions, the promises made only to be broken which drove Roscoe Conkling from the United States Senate, the shuffling and evasion, intrigue and equivocation which preceded this sad event are now known and recognized and discussed as they were not and could not have been at the time. The feeling of horror and sorrow and the resulting period of false sentimentalism over the tragedy obscured certain political issues involved which are now seen in a clearer and true light.

PERSONAL.

RICHARD T. MERBICK is about to have left an estate of $125,000. MRS. JOHN JACOB ASTOR, of New York, donated a box of books to each of the forty libraries of the city of New York.

BISHOP WIGBER, of the Catholic diocese of Newark, will sail for Europe on September 1. He will pay his decennial visit to the Pope.

REV. GEORGE TOMKINS, who has lately returned from the First Baptist church of this city, and his wife, sail by the Cunard steamship "Etruria," at 9:30 a. m. to-morrow for England.

Mrs. JAMES REELEY will go to Vienna and should the Austrian government refuse to receive him it is intimated that the United States government will remain unrepresented at the Vienna court.

KING ALFONSO escaped the vigilance of his cabinet, on Thursday, and slipped away incognito to the Aranjuez hospital and cheerfully the cholera patient. He received a tremendous ovation on his return to Madrid.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND has made the following appointments: Darius H. Ingraham, of Maine, to be consul at United States at Cadiz; James Tenner Lee, of Maryland, to be secretary of Legation of the United States to Austria-Hungary.

JAMES HENRELL RYDALL has just presented to the library of Harvard college a collection of books numbering 688 volumes, picked up by him in the past eight years during his travels in Europe, Africa, India and Italy, and which, but most of the books are Spanish. There are some of the greatest rarity and value and none of them are commonplaces.

THE YOUNG PRINCESS LOUISE OF WALES, who made her debut recently in described as painfully shy—not pretty, but with a gentle and pleasing expression. She was dressed very plainly in pale blue satin and tulle, laced with clusters of cherry blossoms, and wore no jewels save a couple of diamond aigrettes in her hair.

Her elder brother, the prospective king of Spain, is very well and steady.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND, in his relation of appointing an applicant to a certain position, demanded that he should not be engaged in party politics. He intimates, that as a servant of the general public, the appointee had no right to be engaged in the finances of any political party whatever. "And if he does so use," said the president with some vehemence of expression, "I will not have him in my cabinet." He is reported to be very much pleased with the result, and who was never so happy as when...

MY FRIEND EDITH.

From that day Edith and I were on a different footing. The incident I felt in her was changed rather than lessened; that which she felt in me had been increased by our mutual confidence. When we met, Edith usually greeted me with a friendly smile and in a few minutes I was as usual in the subject of the estrangement with my friend.

The mysterious person referred to as "he" or "him," had evidently departed from our neighborhood and I never missed him a good deal. Mrs. Lyall asked me more than once if I did not think a change would do her good, which gave me an opportunity of leaving Edith on the spot.

It ended, however, in her going on a visit to some friends. She departed with so much cheerfulness that I felt convinced she had contrived some means of seeing the "nameless one" as I called him, and I accused her of it; but she only laughed and said, "I will tell you, as I usually do, and we had quite a touching little party in the garden, and I called her 'my dear' and she called me 'my dear' and we were as usual until the following autumn. I was pleased to find Edith did not forget me, and received several letters from her, which were very kind and the waters were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

MY FRIEND EDITH.

From that day Edith and I were on a different footing. The incident I felt in her was changed rather than lessened; that which she felt in me had been increased by our mutual confidence. When we met, Edith usually greeted me with a friendly smile and in a few minutes I was as usual in the subject of the estrangement with my friend.

The mysterious person referred to as "he" or "him," had evidently departed from our neighborhood and I never missed him a good deal. Mrs. Lyall asked me more than once if I did not think a change would do her good, which gave me an opportunity of leaving Edith on the spot.

It ended, however, in her going on a visit to some friends. She departed with so much cheerfulness that I felt convinced she had contrived some means of seeing the "nameless one" as I called him, and I accused her of it; but she only laughed and said, "I will tell you, as I usually do, and we had quite a touching little party in the garden, and I called her 'my dear' and she called me 'my dear' and we were as usual until the following autumn. I was pleased to find Edith did not forget me, and received several letters from her, which were very kind and the waters were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

MY FRIEND EDITH.

From that day Edith and I were on a different footing. The incident I felt in her was changed rather than lessened; that which she felt in me had been increased by our mutual confidence. When we met, Edith usually greeted me with a friendly smile and in a few minutes I was as usual in the subject of the estrangement with my friend.

The mysterious person referred to as "he" or "him," had evidently departed from our neighborhood and I never missed him a good deal. Mrs. Lyall asked me more than once if I did not think a change would do her good, which gave me an opportunity of leaving Edith on the spot.

It ended, however, in her going on a visit to some friends. She departed with so much cheerfulness that I felt convinced she had contrived some means of seeing the "nameless one" as I called him, and I accused her of it; but she only laughed and said, "I will tell you, as I usually do, and we had quite a touching little party in the garden, and I called her 'my dear' and she called me 'my dear' and we were as usual until the following autumn. I was pleased to find Edith did not forget me, and received several letters from her, which were very kind and the waters were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."

My reason for expatriation was to drink of the waters of the spring recommended for the cure of my ailment. I found she was still harping on my estrangement with my neighbor, and she was very kind and called with him. "I am sure," she wrote, "if you have you will be happier for you have a kind heart and it is rather an interesting one."

When I returned to my home in September I heard the Lyalls were at the sea-side, and having, as usual, nothing to do, I went to see them. When I reached the Lyalls' love affair was progressing. They were staying at a little place which has been familiar to me from a child, and which is situated on a grassy summit of the cliffs, where the sea is so close that the waves were doing me good."