LANCASTER, JULY 31, 1885.

Let Them Alone.

The announced article on "What shall be done with our ex-presidents," has appeared in a popular magazine; and, as might have been expected from a writer who proposed such a question as one of popular importance, the author suggests that they become senators of the United States for life, with half the salary received as president. In support of the proposition and against the suggestion that they might constitute a body of serious importance in numbers, it is stated that we have recently had only three living ex-presidents—counting Grant, who is dead and Hayes who was never honestly elected—since the retirement of Washington we have never been without one, and save in 1861-62, when there were five, we have never had with us more than four in any single year.

The suggestion that these ex-presidents be made ex-senators, though not entirely novel, is exceedingly silly. It has no warrant in the constitution and no foundation in the spirit of our institutions. It is true that the Senate, as composed, is the subject of a good deal of popular complaint. There is deep-seated dissatisfaction that Nevada, with half the population of Lancaster county, has as much senatorial representation as New York, and that the vote of Rhode Island, Colorado or Florida, balances that of Pennsylvania. But all of this is in accord with our constitutional doctrine of state rights; and though it may some day be subverted, the chances are that there will always be enough of the little states, with great interests at stake, to prevent the necessary three-fourths for a constitutional amendment, altering the senatorial representation.

The proposition to make life senators out of the ex-presidents meets no existing complaints and remedies no inequalities. It is a purely personal affair, mooted out of consideration for a peculiar class, who it is explained are put into an "awkward and embarrassing position," "at once the most conspicuous and one of the most powerless members of the republic"; "relegation to comparative obscurity of private life, unsupported by a single expression of the nation's gratitude or the slightest official recognition of the loss the public service sustains in parting with its unique experience and trained familiarity with public affairs."

It is further argued that if thus translated to the Senate the ex-presidents would be completely independent, with no obligations to serve and no ambitions to gratify; hence they would be the wisest and safest counselors, the purest protectors of the republic.

All of this is, of course, dreary nonsense, not even fit for the "midsummer" number of a first-class periodical. A man who has held the executive chair of this government leaves it as he went into it, a citizen of the republic. If he discharges his duties well he can never be less than an honored, heroic figure. He can retire with dignity to private life and always be an honored citizen, a sage and adviser of his party; or if in health and vigor, he can, like John Quincy Adams, re-enter the political arena, win new laurels, and die in the harness with undimmed lustre; or he can, like Mr. Arthur, consistently and properly resume the pursuits of private life, and exemplify the duties of a citizen.

There will undoubtedly be a great deal of personal feeling in the pending Virginia campaign. The political issues and party lines are not as distinct there as they have been; and even if they were the candidates chosen are of such name and record that social sentiment and personal feeling would necessarily largely rule the issue. The Wise and the Lees are both old and distinguished families, with a large following. Wise is the reader's champion; Lee the most popular figure. The former is tainted with Mahoneism and has lost the respect of many of his associates. We think he will be beaten.

The "offensive partisans" must go. For he himself had said it.

It is very deplorable that the New Era is not pleased already with the new Democratic postmaster. Give the young man a chance.

There will be a Democratic state convention, August 25.

HONORING THE MARTYRS. The monument to Rebecca Nurse Who was Hanged for a Witch.

The monument erected to the memory of Rebecca Nurse, hanged in Salem, July 19, 1692, for witchcraft, will be dedicated on Thursday at the old homestead at Danvers, when the third annual gathering of her descendants will take place. The exercises will begin at noon at the First church, Danvers Centre, the Rev. C. B. Rice, pastor. This was formerly the Salem village church, of which Rebecca Nurse was a member at the time of her arrest for witchcraft. There will be addresses by the Rev. Flanders Israel, pastor of the First church, Salem, and the Rev. C. B. Rice, after which a procession will be formed and march to the graveyard, where the monument will be unveiled and dedicated. The old homestead from which she was taken will be open for inspection by the kindness of Orin Putnam and daughter, who reside there. Francis Nurse purchased the Bishop farm, as it was then called, April 29, 1678, to be paid for in three years, the land being sold to him for the first 12 years to be $7 per annum, and after that $10 per annum. In the old homestead, which still stands, lived and prospered the Rev. George Herrick, the marshal of Essex, on complaint of Edward and Jonathan Putnam, for having practiced certain detestable arts called witchcraft upon Ann Putnam, Mary Wileent, Elizabeth Hubbard and Abigail Williams. She was committed to Salem jail by John Hawthorne and Jonathan Curwin, judges. On April 11 she was taken to Boston with four others by the order of the great council which met in the First church, Salem. The court met June 29 and the jury brought in a verdict of "not guilty," but the audience made such a clamor that they retired and brought in a verdict of guilty. The prisoners were sentenced to be hanged on July 19, 1692. Rebecca Nurse was brought into the church July 3, Mr. Higginson and Mr. Noyes being in company with her. She was taken to the delegation to the Democratic national convention at Chicago in 1854. John Cadwalader is a live Democrat.

IN YORK COUNTY.

Some days ago wrote a hasty sketch of my ramble over the "Yonkersville" hills, back of Wild Cat Falls, and of my visit to the Goddard mill. There are many curious objects to be seen in the vicinity besides the mill, not the least interesting of which is the old blast furnace long out of use, on the bank of the Goddard short distance below the mill. It is a solid stone structure, something like the tower of an old castle. It is circular in form and bound by heavy iron bands. It is 30 feet in height, perhaps 30 feet wide at the base and tapering to a width of 20 feet at the top, and upon the summit of it is an odd looking little four-story building, not more than half the height or half the diameter of the stone building, but extends far out over the wall and looks as though it might easily be blown off by a heavy wind; but it has stood for years and years, unused, and to most of its inhabitants the purpose of its erection unknown. Ferns and shrubs and weeds grow in the crevices of both the stone and brick structure. Not being an iron-ore producer I shall not further attempt to describe it. As a ruin of a past age it is a picturesque and interesting object, and by its stands a tumble-down building, partly stone and partly brick, filled with heavy old-fashioned machinery, and a little further up the creek, Dr. Townsend informed me, while making excavations, he came upon the site of an old charcoal furnace, built before the Revolutionary war.

ALONG THE GODDARD TRIBUTARY. Leaving the first mill on party dress up the wagon road along the bank of the Goddard as far as Trout run. There are high rocky bluffs on either side of the creek, along the left bank of which the Northern Central railroad company is grading a new branch of their railroad to York with the object of avoiding some heavy grades on their present line. Arriving at the mouth of Trout run we leave our carriage and enter the glen affoot, and follow the babbling, splashing little stream into the woods, where we find the ascent is rather difficult, though not very steep. There are rocks everywhere, some of them picturesquely grouped and covered with lichens and mosses. One of these is called Castle Rock and presents a very fine representation of the battlements and towers of an old baronial castle. Another pretty view has been made of the glen, by an overflowing water has worn away the rock until it has formed a pretty basin about the size of a bathtub, into which water flows from a little creek, and after a short run for several hundred yards, and admiring its many beauties, we retraced our steps to its mouth, where under the shade of overhanging rocks, we had a picnic lunch, having for their table bread, flat rock, close beside the rippling water. Trout run is not so picturesque a scene as it is generally supposed to be, and some day, after the railroad along the banks of the Goddard shall have been finished, will become a popular summer resort.

THROUGH THE FOREST. Re-entering our carriage to return to the mouth of the Goddard, and ascend a good but rather steep road leading into the forest, through which we travel several miles. The timber is not so dense as it is in the woods and is being used for railroad ties, fence posts and rails, and other purposes. There must be at the present time 10,000 railroad ties cut and lying along the road, awaiting their shipment. It appears they were cut in anticipation of the building of a railroad along the west bank of the Susquehanna from Wrightsville north to the mouth of the river, which has been suspended, if not abandoned. At several points along these forest roads are openings from which may be seen the river stretching from Elizabethtown, far beyond Ephrata, and away down almost to the mouth of the river. There are few views more magnificent to be seen anywhere. We scarcely realize when in a paradise like this until we get upon some elevated spot from which we can see in forest and field, orchard and garden, mansion and barn, flocks and herds, and the hundreds of other beauties and blessings by which we are surrounded. If Moses' view from the top of Mount Pisgah had been half as lovely as ours from the top of the York hills, he would have viewed the landscape over and done as I did, made haste to get over the river. THE RIGHT OF PETITION. The Salvation Army Presents a Paper a title and a Halt Log. The Salvation Army marched on Thursday in London with much parade to the parliament buildings to present to the House of Commons a monster petition, requiring the immediate cessation of the export of arms and munitions. The petition contains 500,000 signatures and is one and a half miles long. It was borne in a special carriage. The procession was very large, and halted on the Thames embankment, where the petition proceeded to the House of Commons to present the monster petition.

THE VIRGINIA DEMOCRATS. "Parson" Massey Nominated by Acclamation for Second Place in the Ticket. The Democratic state convention of Virginia completed its ticket on Thursday by nominating John E. Massey for lieutenant-governor, and Rufus A. Ayres for attorney-general. A resolution was adopted by a rising vote, to award a certificate of commendation to U. S. Grant, and gratification at the thought that he is trying to honor himself towards the people of the South with such a high honor, and that he can never be forgotten, and tendering sincere sympathy to his bereaved family. The platform adopted opposes all further agitation of the civil question, and retention of the civil service reform "while opposing the appointment or retention in office of offensive party names, and especially his action in removing offensive federal officials in Virginia.

Who the Paid-Bearers Will Be. The president named the following to act as pallbearers: General William T. Sherman, Lieutenant General Philip H. Sheridan, Admiral David D. Porter, Vice Admiral Stephen C. Brown, General Joseph E. Johnston, of Virginia; General Simon B. Buckner, of Kentucky; Hamilton Fish, of New York; George S. Boutwell, of Massachusetts; Geo. W. Childs, of Pennsylvania; John A. Logan, of Illinois; George W. Lusk, of New York; Oliver Lloyd, of New York.

A Novelty Exhibition. Unless some unforeseen calamity occurs, the "Novelty" exhibition to be held in Philadelphia next fall, will be a brilliant success. Nothing that cannot stand joint tests of novelty and merit will be allowed to enter, and the result of this restriction will be to establish the principle of the survival of the fittest. The exhibition will be conducted by the press of Philadelphia, and the list of applications has already attained goodly proportions.

A Lightning Rod Fraud. Adam Wilson has swindled many of the farmers of Somerset, Fayette and Bedford counties, in this state, "by taking orders for lightning rods and other articles, to be supplied by the International Manufacturing Company of Chicago, which concern has no existence." Wilson, who is said to be "of handsome exterior and well dressed," obtained advance payments to the amount of $8,000.

BIRTHDAY FLOWERS. O roses for the little head! A long and happy life, And health and joy, to thee and thine, with little we or strife. O heartache for the little hands! Sure sorrow waits all, And only prayer can bring the peace that frees us from the thrall. O lilies for the little heart! And all through care and pain, Her heritage from Fatherland, and Heaven's purity, remain! —Clara B. Traverdine.

Perfect Contentment in Good Health. Requires the support of the unsullied reputation in the land, which furnishes it, to give unsuspecting buyers proper relief, and positive protection from the frauds of counterfeiting their neighbors' cats and dogs, or feasting off the residue of hotel menus and similar profitable supplies. Equal discretion on the part of those who require a healthy and nourishing tonic would always insist on having Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, which is the only reliable article on the market, and is the only one that is the genuine article beyond peradventure. Any reliable druggist or grocer will furnish it.

Lady Physicians for Bombay. The Bombay merchants recently appointed a committee to try to induce some lady physicians to go from England to Bombay. One lady has sailed, and more are to follow. In all such warm climates, and particularly in the warm latitudes of this country, the health of the women is often impaired, and counteracted by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, which is the only reliable article on the market, and is the only one that is the genuine article beyond peradventure. Any reliable druggist or grocer will furnish it.
