EARLY GOLDEN ROD. n the first drowsy heat of August noon, Ere yet the pastures are embrowned and dry, Or yet the swallow breathes her parting sigh, ader the red sun and the crimson moon,

And foamy daisies nodded in disdain At July sun and min.

With thy approach the year seems waxing late, And yet its ripest fuliness is not come— Far off we scarce can hear the "Harvet Home," The apple-pickers loiter at the gate, Well pleased with maids to wait,

When I the sunshine of thy bloom behold, And pluck and bear thee home with tond I am the richer for thy lavishness MORNING GLORY. Wondrous interlacement! Holding fast to threads by green and sliky rings, With the dawn it spreads its white and purple wings; Generous in its bloom and sheltering while it clings, Stardy morning glory! Creeping through the easement, Slanting to the floor in dusty shining beams, Dancing on the door in quick fantastic gleams Comes the new day's light and pours its tideles streams, Golden morning glory !

In the lonely basement, Rocking in the sun, the baby's cradle stands; Now the little one thrusts out his rosy hands; Soon his eyes will open; then in all the lands No such morning glory!
