Hegular Correspondence of the INTELLIGENCES:
COLUMNIA, Aug. 20.—After an enforced
idleness of some few years the hum of industry will soon be heard at what was known as be Shawnee rolling mill, now styled the coumbis rolling mill. When this mill was lest built it was kept running for several rears, but owing to the iron panic of 1873 the fill was shut down for an indefinite period. Since that time the mill was in operation for few months, but success did not attend L During the past winter there were ru-nors that the "old mill" had been purchased tome well-known iron men, and the reof Harrisburg; John Keller, of Lancaster; and Michael Schall and J. W. Stearns, of York, had become the owners of the mill, York, had become the owners of the mill, and at once set about making extensive repairs, under the supervision of Col. C. S. Kauffman. Visitors at the place could hardly recognize the old mill as it is at present, as the improvements and repairs have been very complete. It is expected that the mill will commence operations about next week, and when it does it will keep running very steadily, as the owners can find a ready market for all their iron. About 200 men and boys will be employed at the mill and fourteen puddling and four heating furnaces will be in operation. This will be an important and valuable addition to the business interests of the town.

While engaged in doing some of the neces sary work on the farm of his father, in the suburbs of town, Harry Stamm met with a painful accident by having a horse tramping on his right foot. The injury is not serious, but quite painful. A Runaway Team

This prorning a team of two borses and wagon, belonging to a farmer, residing in Manor township, was left standing on Union street. The borses became frightened by the barking of dog, and started, running down the street at a terrific rate of speed. After going for a couple of squares the horses were stopped without any damage being done, excepting the scattering of the boards on the wagon in a promiscuous manner.

MR. JOHN O'BRIEN'S CIRCUS.

Performances That Seemed to Give Satisfaction.
Poor Day for the Thieves.
John O'Brien's circus had a large audience

resterday afternoon, but in the evening the rowd was much greater. Long before 7 o'clock there was a great crowd around the ticket wagon and the agents were kept very busy. Every seat in the tent was taken in a short time, and many were left to stand. "Pogy" as the manager is familiarly known in as the manager is familiarly known in the profession, sat in the main entrance and greeted those coming in with a smile. He had good reason to feel well, for his business was bigger than it had been for some weeks. On account of recent light patronage he is slowly making tracks for Philadelphia, where he resides, and next week will open a ten-cent circus for an indefinite period.

The menagerie with this show is very small and looks somewhat ragged. It includes, "Empress," the big surily elephant that has killed several keepers and two other small specimens. The ion is very old and has a careworn look. The camel looks like a Buffale robe stripped of its hair a hyena, leopard, yellow dog and a band wagon.

The performance in the ring was not bad by a great deal, and the majority of the people were better pleased than they have been at larger shows. The features of the entertainment were the riding of Miss Lottie Aymar, a handsome young woman, and Albert Lowande, both of whom were warmly received. The trained dogs made a great hit and they certainly performed some wonderful feata. The acrobats and trapeze performance were fair and the old elephant did some good tricks. The clowns were very bad and their jokes reminded the oldest inhabitant of childhood days. The songs were poor and the singers worse. Strange to say, three-fourths of the audience thought everything the men did or said was funny. They received thunders of applause although deserving of a load of bird shot. The show ended with the usual fake known as a "concert" and quite a number of solid citizens, whose children had considerable trouble yesterday afternoon, persuading them to attend the show, remained to see the ham song and dance men.

The side show included an Italian with

In a letter dated August 1, 1885, President Cieveland is alleged to have said regarding the appointment of a territorial judge, "Your confession comes too late to be of immediate use to the public service."

Of the seven appointees to judicial positions since the Senate adjourned that of Edward J. Dawne, of Oregon, to be judge of the territorial district of Alaska, is generally supposed to be the one who " is not qualified morally or professionally." The records at the state department show that Mr. Dawne was appointed United States judge for Alaska on July 21, 1885. His commission was dated and countersigned that day by the secretary of state. No sooner had the president made the appointment than telegrams were received from Portland and Salem, Oregon, to the effect that the appointment of Mr. Dawne, if correctly reported, was a great surprise to the Democrats of that state. The telegrams were more in the way of linquiry, the impression being that the press dispatches had, perhaps, confused the names. But before these telegrams were received the president was committed by his executive act to the appointment of Mr. Dawne. The records of the executive mansion, department of justice and state department could not be defaced. All showed the appointment of Mr. Dawne and the issue of the commission to him.

President Cleveland was worried. He The side show included an Italian with trained birds, a German Circassian girl, a fat woman who was shaped like a balloon and almost as targe, a fellow who kept himself straight by running a sword in his stomach and another with pictures tattooed in his skin that gave him the appearance of a three sheet circus bill. The music for this show was furnished by a sleepy looking band as the "Big Six."

As far as known no one was robbed at the show, and that certainly is wonderful, judging from the appearance of the crowd on the grounds. The police, a number of whom ware in citizen's clothes, were constantly on the lookout and although several men, known to be thieves, were on hand they did not attempt anything wrong. The gamblers who accompany shows, and especially shows of this kind, to fleece the countrymen, kept in the shade also, much to the comfort of some of the gentlemen who read the legend on the red wagons yesterday.

The show left at a late hour last night for Coalesville, where it will exhibit to-day. of Mr. Dawne and the issue of the commission to him.

President Cleveland was worried. He had already suspended Judge McAllister, jr., to make room for Dawne, because it was alleged that McAllister was not fit to be a judge. There was one thing, however—the commission had not been mailed to the appointee and he had not yet taken the oath of office. While the worry was going on a letter was received from, it is said, ex-Sena; tor Grover, of Oregon, whose home is at Salem, where Dawne resides. His letter and the president's reply are now common property.

Telling young Merritt that he and his sweetheart must consider themselves under arrest, the officers called a carriage and took them to police headquarters. The young man took his arrest coolly, while he declared that the police had no right to stop him, but Miss Hodgson wept and appeared much surprised. Inspector Sieers sent Merritt to the Jefferson market police court and had him remanded to gain time, supposing that the prisoner could be held on a charge of abduction. Merritt gave his age as twenty-seven years and said that he was a florist living at Newport. He is a slender man, with dark hair and eyes, small mustache and fairly good-looking. In the presence of reporters, while he was at police headquarters, he was not inclined to talk.

Miss Hodgson was placed in the care of Matron Webb for a time, and she became more cheerful when assured that no harm would come to young Merritt. She said that she was twenty-two years old, and her looks confirmed the statement. Her slight, angular form was clothed in a neatly fitting but the the 163d Psaim, and the 11th and 12th verses.

Richard spoke to my father then, and we were told that we'might marry some day if we kept of the same mind until we had got old enough to know what was best for us. Lately my father has tried to keep us apart and my mother sides with him, although she promised once that I could marry Richard. My sister was forced to give up a young man to whom she was engaged and my brother had trouble in getting married. I thought they wanted me to marry some Fifth avenue swell and I made up my mind that I would have Richard anyhow. I don't see why father objects. He ran away with my mother when he married her. The sergeant says his name is Henry Benner, and was familiarly known about the Broadway market as "Dutch Hen." In 1879 numerous robberies of horses occurred in York and Lancaster counties, and Captain Auld, then a sergeant, and Sergeant Diggs recovered several of the animals in East Baltimore. A man named Rittler was captured and taken to York, where Sergeant Diggs went as a witness. He afterwards learned from a party with whom Benner corresponded that he was captured near the Maryland line and taken to Lancaster county, where he was sentenced to twenty years' imprisonment. Sergeant Diggs has no doubt of James Henry and Henry Benner, alias "Dutch Hen," being the same person. The sergeant does not think Benner was married nor had a daughter. with him, out I will marry Richard it I have to run away again."
