Something Should Be Done.

The narrow escape of the New York and Chicago limited express from a terrible accident on the Pennsylvania railroad near Elizabethtown, with the chances of a like experience that have been demonstrated before, must impress the management with the necessity of taking better precautions against this danger. The roof of the tunnel was removed some years ago because, we believe, the arch was deemed insecure and occasionally a stone dropped to the track. It is apparent that the sides of the cut were left too precipitous from the frequent rock and land slides which have occurred. We should think the obstruction, delays and labor already occasioned there were more expensive than the repairs necessary to give the sides a greater slope would be. All the through passenger trains of the road are run over the single track passing through this tunnel cut and its present hazardous condition should not continue.

The Labor Problem.

What will be the final outcome of the organization of labor now taking place so rapidly in this country, we will have to await the future to know; but meanwhile we may try to form an opinion about it. The immediate prospect is that there will be a great reduction in the amount of employment offered to labor, owing to the unwillingness of those who employ it to take the chances of the threatened increase in the cost of labor. The uncertainty will check enterprise. The price of manufactures is likely to advance, because of the increase of cost and the diminution of product.

But that in the end the wages of labor will be increased is very doubtful. The laborer cannot do without employment indefinitely. The employer can let his works remain indefinitely idle. They may pass to his creditors, but when it becomes certain that his creditors will get them anyhow, there will be no inducement for any profit on their investment of capital. For a still shorter time can they be so high as to make the cost of manufacture greater than the selling price. The wages of labor must be such as the employer can afford to pay; and this none will question. But the doubt is as to how much he can pay.

Those whom he employs will not believe his statement of cost. In Wilmington, Delaware, the other day, Mr. Jackson, of the Jackson & Sharp company, exhibited his books to his employees to satisfy them that he could not pay them greater wages upon the prices his company was receiving for its products. The examination was made and showed that Mr. Jackson's statement was correct; but his workmen still doubted. They thought they had been deceived. They did not trust their own competency to comprehend the books they examined.

Generally workmen are ignorant of everything save their special employment. If they were called to manage the business in which they are employed, the sheriff would sell them out in a very short time. Yet they are apt to think that the whole business is the result of their labor and that they earn all its profits. They consider that their employers have no advantage over them, save in their capital, and that all the reward the business reaps is the reward of capital.

No mistake could be greater. The profit is earned by the skillful manipulation of capital or lost by its unwise direction. In this very manner the control of the labor force is one of the largest fields for the display of skill. The employer who would yield to all the demands of labor would soon be in the sheriff's hands; and it is a notable fact that the employer who is most resolute in maintaining the control of his own business, and in resisting the dictation of those for whom he provides labor, is the one who is most successful in his business. But it is also to be noted that he is most fair and liberal to his employees when he is left alone.

Every sensible employer desires to pay as large wages as he can afford to pay, because he knows that when he pays the best price in the market he gets the best product; and besides this he desires to keep his customers contented and steady in his employment. It is very doubtful whether the Knights of Labor will ever become strong enough to dictate to the employers of labor how they shall employ it and what they shall pay it. It is contrary to every sound business principle to yield a business to such outside control; and consequently the business that is so yielded, will not succeed; wherefore such dictation will not succeed, since no one will deny that business must be successful to enable labor to find employment. And the significant question therefore is whether the Knights of Labor will not kill the goose that gives its golden eggs. And the answer depends wholly upon the extent to which the organization proposes to press its present program. If it uses it wisely and strictly to the wages of labor are made as good as the profit of business will warrant, and the institution will be a benefit to the laborer. But if it is used to dictate to the employing class generally what it shall do, whom it shall employ, how and what and when it shall pay, and in what manner treat its workmen, it will fail.

In the competition which business has throughout the world, its guidance demands the highest wisdom, which it finds generally in the men who float naturally into the direction of its affairs. They need to have free hands for their work, and the best of them are so constituted that they will not work with their hands tied. If they were of less resolute material they would never rise, over the shoulders of their fellows, to the vast responsibilities they have taken in charge. Workmen need beware lest in seeking higher wages they lose all wages; for nothing is more certain than that their employment must cease if they ask what the profit of business cannot pay.

Gladstone and Parnell.

It is significant of the close relations existing between Gladstone and Parnell that the latter in a recent interview declares the most important factor towards the securing of home rule for Ireland is the health of Mr. Gladstone. The Irish leader can conceive of no graver calamity to the cause than that Mr. Gladstone's voice should fail him in the crisis that is at hand. This frank expression of views from Mr. Parnell should set at rest all the rumors that himself and Mr. Gladstone are working at cross purposes. There is no doubt that they are in thorough union on the Irish programme, and no stronger pair of statesmen ever stood together for an oppressed country.

Mr. Parnell sees many good reasons why the land purchase bill of Mr. Gladstone should pass. The Irish landlords are naturally anxious for it, as they will get value for property, the ownership of which has been very annoying. As these are largely Tories, they must have an important influence in weakening Tory opposition to the bill. The enemies of the scheme cannot help seeing that the result of an appeal to the country, the issue being home rule for Ireland, would not place them in a better position than they now are. For seventy Conservative seats were gained by the aid of the Irish vote at the last election, and these would naturally fall back to the Liberals if the issue of Irish home rule was fairly presented. What Liberal loss would be otherwise incurred would in this manner be made up, and the final result would probably be a majority of 170 Liberals and Nationalists combined over the Tories.

Surely the prospect for Ireland's autonomy was never more cheering, and fervent wishes will go up everywhere that the Sage of Hawarden's health may be spared at this time of such urgent need for Erin.

The Smith family in Philadelphia are in no danger of extinction, the directory showing that they number 6,630.

We are now on the eve of that hateful-to-husbands period when the bonnets must bloom in spring.

It is the quintessence of pleasure to speed the parting guest when he is most disagreeable. Good bye, Blair bill, good bye!

The Auditor General is the name of an organization founded in New York last February. It has for its purpose to prevent the killing of any wild bird not used for food; the taking or destroying of the eggs or nests of any wild birds; the wearing of the feathers of wild birds. While they are at it they might as well prescribe three-decked bonnets.

Even poetry must keep step with science. More than fifty years ago—so long has he demonstrated "the increasing purpose" and possibilities of song—Tennyson wrote in "The Palace of Art," his line "The snowy poles of moonless Mars." A few years ago Professor Hall discovered at Washington two Martian satellites, and Tennyson, who is always bound to be scientifically accurate, has changed the verse to read:

He saw the snowy poles and moons of Mars,
The marvelous light of drifted light
In his night stars
Whereof the one more bright, e'er.

The verse is now correct, not only as to the moons of Mars but also as to the location of the planet's nebula in Orion. If Longfellow's verse could be revised with a view to botanical exactness quite a number of alterations would be necessary.

The attempt has been made to manufacture some capital against Congressman Patterson of New York, for absence from Congress. His latest benevolent act proves that in the roll-call of charity he answers "present" with a clear, firm voice.

Wisconsin's Eighth congressional district is represented by William T. Price, a Republican. His opponent, attracted to himself some attention by his fierce opposition to pensioning the widow of Gen. Hancock. He is quoted as saying that "the practice of granting large pensions to widows of men who have been receiving big salaries and who died in a destructive of American manhood. The influence is to make men live up to the last dollar of their salaries in pomp and extravagance and champagne. It shakes every principle of justice and creates a privileged class." In this Mr. Price proves himself a low-priced statesman. He contends in effect that those traits of generosity which characterized the dead hero of Gettysburg, which made it impossible for him to turn a deaf ear to the calls of charity, were unworthy of him, and that more credit would have attached to him had he hoarded that salary which the government gave him. This may be Price's opinion, but the great body of warm-hearted men and women of the country will be glad that Hancock's fallings "cleared to virtue's side." And, remembering his magnificent services to his country in her hour of greatest peril, his big generosity to his poor comrades in arms in the days that followed will forever prove him one of the bravest and tenderest men of his time.

It was not enough that the Pennsylvania railroad insurance plan proved unpopular with the employees of the road. Now the company is said to have received a significant intimation from the state authorities to the effect that the establishment of an insurance scheme is beyond its charter powers.

Well Known Bank President Flees.

Charles P. Mathewson, president of the Norfolk National bank, of Norfolk, Nebraska, has fled for parts unknown and left his resignation as bank president. It is said he has lost his own fortune and that of his brother-in-law in what speculation, but that the bank is secured against loss. Mathewson was well known throughout Nebraska. He had served two terms in the legislature; had been speaker of the House of Representatives, and was a delegate to the last National Republican convention. He was regarded as a prominent candidate for governor next fall.

Serious Bituminous Coal Strike.

A telegram from Huntington, Pa., says: "The strike in the bituminous coal region, which has existed for two weeks, is proving a very serious affair to the operators, who have contracts to fill. In order to fill their contracts they are obliged to resume at the advanced price asked for by the miners or work elsewhere, resulting in heavy losses either way. Berwind, White & Co. have ordered coal from England, and two of their steamers are now on the coast."

AMONG THE NEW BOOKS.

BYRON'S MEDITATIONS IN PROSE HISTORY. By Alfred Lee, Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal church in this country. 12mo. York, 1885. Harper & Bros.

Of the kind of books to which this belongs, the Episcopal church has produced few, and it would seem that the class of devoted readers to whom they are addressed is sufficiently numerous to warrant their production. The series of discourses on the Christian soul, which Bishop Lee's work consists, are purely devotional. They breathe the sweet and powerful spirit of a pious, Christian soul, whose faith is firmly fixed and unquestioning, whose hope is sure and undisturbed, and whose love is warm and deep to God and man; at spirit untroubled by doubts and linguistic difficulties or questions of critical, historical, scientific controversy. It connotes itself with none of these. It is eminently serene and restful in its tone and in its effect on the reader; a book full of food and nourishment, encouragement, comfort and edification for the Christian believer. Fifty nights in the Old and seventeen in the New Testament are contemplated, sometimes with a glowing eloquence, often with much restraint of thought, always in a trustful, deeply devout spirit.

MANUAL TRAINING. The solution of social and industrial problems. By the Rev. Dr. Henry H. Wood. 12mo. Pp. 478. Harper & Bros.

The author's theory is that through the arts alone all branches of learning find expression and touch human life; the true definition of education is the training of the powers of man to the culminating point of action. Mr. Ham has been laboring in Chicago, through the press and upon the other educational courses, in behalf of manual training, and there his theory is being tested in the splendidly equipped manual training school erected on the North Branch. Much of the book is taken up with an exposition of the various departments of this institution; and the whole plan of the volume is a forecast of the combination of manual and mental training.

LIVES OF GREAT STATESMEN. Second Series. Epitaphs—Hemlock. By the Rev. Dr. Henry H. Wood. 12mo. Pp. 478. Harper & Bros.

This is the second volume of an admirable series by the same author, the first of which was noticed in these columns before. Epitaphs, Kimonos, Pericles, Alcibiades, Alcibiades, Kleon, Brasidas, Demosthenes, Nikias and Hermokrates are the subjects of the present work and they are treated in the critical and historical spirit which distinguishes the author. He aims essentially to contrast the Athenian polity and that of Sparta, and of the essays in this volume a fair number of the characters of the two that of Brasidas points the author's moral very clearly.

IN THE GOLDEN DAYS. Edna Lyall. 16mo. Pp. 67. Harper & Bros.

The author of this historical romance writes the nineteenth century field of prevailing fiction, and while she is not a devotee of "historical novel," she introduces Algernon Sydney, Betterton, the actor, Francis Burnfield, and a half-dozen other personages of the England of the seventeenth century with a good deal of freedom. They play a secondary part in the story, however, which is one "golden days," or of finer times, as you view them.

"Harper's Monthly" for April, from C. H. Barr, is a number of rare merit; and apart from all its special features, the regular monthly departments of George William Curtis, Charles Dudley Warner and W. D. Howells are a feast of intellect and wit. Five years of Harper's Monthly constitute a library in itself; and the index of over 700 pages to this vast repository of science and learning, history and art, literature and business, is an open sesame to storehouses of valuable reference. The new edition of this comprehensive work, just published, is a vast improvement on the first issue. It has 51,000 references and comprises a remarkably complete exposition of modern life in every department.
