Comparison of the Oak and Linden-A Timely Article, Translated From the German For 2 the "Germantown Telegraph" Hy Henry Fielding-Proce and Poetry.

The people throughout all generations, in their primitive days at least, have always turned to their forests, where silence and prace reigned, and which yielded to them more than all that they had found in the busy haupts of men. Deep into their hearts the roots of the grand old trees seem to have grown till they become part of their very selves, united in association, domesti and historie, to such a degree that they come down to us in history hand in hand. This has been especially so with the Germans, to whom these great solitudes have been more than a delight; they have found in them refuge and a sanctuary. Therefore, the following thoughts of the monarchs of the wood, above all of the lindens, around which associations of such deep and eloquent interest cluster, may possibly prove not quite uninteresting.

If the strong oak is to be considered the symbol of German power, if from its branches the leaves must be gathered which form the crown of victory women for the head of the home-coming hero from the field of battle, that it alone can yield the magic twig which pressed into the dead hands of those slain in pressed into the dead hands of those stain in the wars, will open for them the doors of Waihalls, it is the heaven-seeking beech that embodies the highest idea of the sublimity and true elevation of human thought. Its column-like stem leads the eye upward to leafy canopy that roofs green earth like a sec-ond heaven and beneath its dome one hears the soft whisperings and rustling of leaves, the mysterious murmurings of the life of the woods, and the voice of God sounds through it all as a temple.

the woods, and the voice of God sounds through it all as a temple.

Martial music belongs to the oak woods, the peals of the organ recall the solemn depths of the beech groves, but under the lindens rescend the merry measures of the dance, the giad laughter of joyous youth. In the "honey mouth" the atmosphere under these treas is interesting in its sweetness. "honey month" the atmosphere under these trees is intoxicating in its sweetness. The bees, busy little creatures, swarm upon its honey-laden branches; gorgeous butter-fles sport through the branches, and from above the finch calls lovingly to his mate. And nights, when the moon looks mildly down from heaven, her soft radiance easting magic spells upon the shadowy depths, soft whisperings are heard under the linden trees, for here fond lovers swear eternal trees, for here fond lovers swear eternal truth to trusting maids. How much of love's joy and woe could even one venerable tree have learned which had listened to the vows of one generation !

THE LINDEN IN SONG AND HISTORY. In the hymns of the people, in the here songs, in the rhymes, tales and sages of all tierman history, echoes and re-echoes the praise of the linden. The tenderest sentiment and the deepest feeling, the most perfect union in family life, the German asseciates with this tree. Under its far-reaching shade the young villagers dance, the citizen before his door and everywhere coung and old gladly assemble beneath its branches. Next to the oak, to whom the natural historian gives precedence as the longest-lived among our trees, stands the linden, among which many can be found whose existence can be traced back 500, 700, and some even to 1,000 years. Until re-cently the cantons held their courts of justice under the lindens, and the Holy Feam selected the linden groves for their nightly meetings. It was in the shades of these be-loved groves that the first signs of gentleness manifested themselves in the German character, for it was here in these meetings that we too long had shown but "man's inhumanity for man :" it was here the stern wills weak for man;" it was here the stern wills weak-ened, yielding to the tender influences of the scene, and Love and Charity began their holy reign in these hearts so long obdurate, so long deaf to their tender pleading. Though the majesty of the law was main-tained and its stern decrees executed, yet the grest, unchangeable claims of humanity had been acknowledged, and scant though the acknowledgement was they were no longer to be ignored.

SOME HISTORIC TREES, One of these noted trees stood for seven hundred years on the old mountain road r near Yugenheim. Beneath the counts of Katzenellentogen, now a long extinct race, collected their tithes, which right was granted them in the year 1407. But long years before this race was ever heard of the Frankish kings had held their tribunals here, and here even yet are visible traces of here, and here even yet are visible traces of these courts and remains of the seat occupied by the presidents. The tribunal convened by our foretathers under the lindens but sel-dom executed their sentences, and if they were bloodly ones never beneath their hon-ored boughs. For this the cak was usually selected, and to dreadful deeds and gloomy swriftees which have been wrought under their solemn shades could their mighty rear-low bear testimony were the voice but inteing bear testimony were the voice but intel ligible to the ear of man.

Another surviver of these long past scenes

a relic of the centuries gone by, is the ceir-brated finden of the old Landsberg. In 1850 it suffered fatal injury from a great fire, whose envious tongues greedily devoured the his-toric tokens of ancient German times and planted in its mighty body the seeds of cer-tain death. Since this fire this giant linden, whose height was almost seventy feet and whose circumference measured forty feet, beneath whose widespreading, leafy dome the youth from far and near had assembled, where the music of the wandering minstrol had resounded and the golden-haired peasant maid whirled in the dance of the midsummer testival long before old Landsberg stood, has steadily failen to decay.

PEACE IN ITS SHADE. In the year 1800 a terrible storm raged. which the people of the time considered a miracle sent by heaven to sweep all evil passions from the earth and purify the air of all wickedness in anticipation of the revolution and reconstruction, which it was hoped would make a new century so much better than that just ended. The destructive hurricane uprooted among others an immense linden, the favorile of the surrounding country, not far from a little village in Frankenland. At its roots were found, as if in derision of these old soothsayers, short swords, spurs, horse shoes, bracelets, bucklers of the most artistic workmanship, indicating Roman origin, every proof of the existence of battle and strife, wild sin, and power used for destruction. But it was at the root of the linden that these arms for defense as well as of defiance were found, and the tradition might be read that within the circle of its influence eternal paces shall reign, and beneath it the tattle axe shall be buried deep. The age of this linden must have exceeded that of Methusaleb.

In Troes, in the canton of Grantunden, towers to-day the linden which witnessed the oath of the enslaved Switzer, sworn for the sake of his freedom. Beneath the enchanted influence of the linden tree, where the ancestors of this brave race now held in bitter bondage by Austria's despotic power encamped as free men, the shamefully oppressed spirit once more asserted itself. As the child flies to its mother's breast when griefs oppress and sorrows of the heart terment, so turns the German in joy or woe to his linden tree, where the very soul of love and peace seems to find embodiment.

In the abbey gaden at Schoenthal, in the Wurtemburg mountains, for many years has stood (and yet stands) a wide boughed linden, sharply bitten by the tooth of time, tossed in the wind and tempest-riven. Beneath its shade the joilty abbots of long passed days doubtless held merry converse over their vesper-bread. and reconstruction, which it was hoped would make a new century so much better than

THE LINDEN OF NUREMBERG. In the court yard of the palace gardens at Cuniguade, empress and wife of Henry 11, in pursuance of a vow, tradition says, in 1020, Each year, until recently, young leaves have Each year, until recently, young leaves have unfolded and fresh blossoms have scented the air even as they did for almost a thousand years; but alas, no longer does it shadow the old garden! The ancient trunk is hollow and the brittle bark is protected by thin boards. How long will it be before this old monument of the German pest, under whose protecting shade the ancestors of that widely celebrated race, the Hohenzolleras, found shelter and repose, will go forth and give to the German earth an eternal farewell? The lindens are true to the Hohenzolleras, and the Hohenzolleras are true to the lindens, for to-day qwells the honored head of the race at Berlin. Unter den Linden!" What could be a more beautiful tribute to these old trees than that fresh shoots should be taken from the old stame and planted as loying memorials.

THE PATRIARCH OF THE POREST. There is one linden which, beyond all others, commands our admiration by its wonderful majesty and beauty, as well as by the strength which has enabled it to withstand the storms of time, and which could tell wondrous tales of Charles the Great and his paladins could its voice but find "hearing cars." Near Neuerstadt on the Kocher, in the kingdom of Wurtemberg, is a linden under whose mighty roof one thousand men can find comfortable shelter. Like a venerable patriarch, surrounded by his descendants, this giant of the forest stands in the midst of the young lindens, planted to preserve the foliage and to conceal the gaps made by time, for the branches, like giant arms, begin to curve and bend beneath the weariness of age, and for the past four hundred years they have been supported by stone column. Nobles and cloistered gentlemen, as well as other notables, have erected these one hundred supports for this prince among trees. Sorrowfully and at regular intervals those boughs are shortened at which the tooth of time has gnawed too successfully. But the old giant still stands with all a giant's strength and will far outlast us all.

Truly the contemplation of such trees fills us with admiration and awe. They are true to us, tried friends in all our griefs and vexations. They whisper of peace and rest, and their magic fragrance carries solace to young and old.

"In meadow fair, by whisp'ring stream,
There stands a linden tree,
Beneath its shade full many a dream
Hath count to me,

Deep in its bark fond words I've cut, And names of those held dear? On land or sea, dear linden tree, Thy voice I hear!"

CUTICURA REMEDIES.

Little Sufferer Cleansed, Purified, and Beautified by the Outlours Remedies.

It affords me pleasure to give you this report of the cure of our little grandchild by your Cirricura Respons. When six months old his left hand bogan to swell and had every appearance of a large boil. We poultieed it, but all to no purpose. About five months after it became arunning sore. Soon other sores formed. He then had two of them on each hand, and as his blood became more and more impure it took less time for them to break out. A sore came on the chin, beneath the under lip, which was very offensive. His head was one solid seal, discharging a great deal. This was his condition at twenty-two months old, when I undertook the care of him, his mother having died when he was a little more than a year old, of consumption (serofola of conres). He could walk a little, but could not get up if he fell down, and could not move when used, having no use of his hands. I immediately commenced with the Curicura Resertes, sing the Curicura and Curicura Resertes, and when he had taken one bottle of the Curicura Resolvers, his head was completely cured, and when he had taken one bottle of the Curicura Resolvers, and he was improved in every way. We were very much encouraged, and continued the use of the remedies for a year and a half. One sore after another healed, a bony matter forming in each one of these five deep ones just before healing, which would finally grow loose and were taken out; then they would heal rapidly. One of these night bone formations I preserved. After taking a dozen and a half bottles he was completely cured, and is now, at the age of six years, a strong and healthy child. The scars on his hands must always remain; his hands are strong, though we once feared he would never to able to use them. All that physicians did for him did him no good.
