A KNOT OF BLUE

- She hath no gens of luster bright To sparkle in her halr; No need hath she of borrowed light
- No need bath she of portower as To make her beauty fair. Upon her shining looks afteat Are daisies wet with dow, And peeping from her lissome throat A little knot of blue.
- A dainty knot of blue, A ribbon bitthe of bue,— It fills my dreams with sunny gleams, That little knot of bigo.
- I met her down the shadowed lan-
- Reneath the apple-tree, The balmy blossoms fell like rain Upon my love and me; And what I said or what I did
- That morn I never knew, But to my breast there came and hid A little knot of blue A little knot of blue,
- A love not strong and true,—
 Twill hold my heart till life shall part,
 That little knot of blue.

GLASS-BATING.

A Clever Trick, and How it is Performed—Giv-ing the Whole Thing Away.

From the Boston Transcript.

No matter how absurd anything is the great majority of people are always willing, if they can understand it, to accept any explanation offered and be satisfied with it This has been especially true of the alleged glass-eating, which has now become a regular "profession" with a large number of men -a woman has never yet tried it. The feat originated in Philadelphia, where, it seems, a negro appeared to develop a peculiar fancy for lamp chimneys and other kinds of glass as an article of diet. The doctors advertised as an article of diet. The doctors advertised the thing extensively at the time, by declaring that the man would surely die. He did not, however, to their amazement, and still continues to dope credulous people into the belief that be consumes "fused sand." His pose as the "original and only" glass-eater was soon spoiled by the appearance of numerous other applicants for glass-eating glory, and now a dime museum is poor indeed that can not support one these "human estriches." They are the legitimate successors of the sword-swallowers and eaters of fire, who were at one time the standard "wonder," at circuses and museums. The sword-swallwere at one time the standard "wonder," at circuses and museums. The sword-swaitower is obliged to educate his throat so as to allow a foreign substance to remain in it for an indefinite period. That this is a difficult task let any one who believes to the centrary run even his finger down his throat and mark the result. The fire-eater toughers his mouth with astringent washes, and then uses for fire volatile substances, which produce a great deal of flame with but tittle heat. But how does this with but little heat. But how does this glass-eater dispose of his flinty lunch, which, if taken into his stomach, would produce the same effect as a score of lances or a dose of cy anide of potassium—a most agonizing death." Powderest glass has long been used as a soy-erign but cruel remedy for superfluons dogs, cats, etc. Now if the stomach of a dog or cat, which so easily digests bones and other hard substances, cannot dispose of a little pow-dered glass, how then do the interior organs of the colored "professor" at a neighboring dime museum stand the strain of a dozen, more or less, meals of this kind a day? The most obvious answer to this is—that the eater of glass never cats glass, in fact, although those who witness the edifying spectacle and are allorded the opportunity of exploring the dark recesses of the Ethiopian's guilet, may be unable to wholly understand what he does with the pieces in his mouth. The explana-tion by the Roxbury medical man, whose certificate is printed on the bills, of the man-ner in which the performer disposes of his dyspeptic load is ludicrous in the extreme when one begins to think of the absordity of it. He says: "From a personal examination of the man's stomach I have found that the gas-tric fuices and alkalies contained therein are just such as will dissolve glass, iron, or stone." Anyone who has dabbled in chemistry knows that the statement is a bare-faced romance. In fact, about the only acid romance. In fact, about the only acid that will dissolve glass—hydromoric—is so powerful that should it get into this pretentions darky's interior it would eat its way out and put an end to his professional career in less time than it takes to record the fact.

But the man really does take glass—not bites out of tumblers, but thin glass, such as lamp chimneys are made of—into his mouth, and, with a pinch of sait, probably to take off the excessive freshness of his meal, and a glass of water to wash it down, chews it up and apparently swallows it. At any rate, the glass does not remain in the performer's mouth, as an examination by the writer's finger's proved. And it was real, every-day glass, as several pieces taken from the mouth just as he was on the point of swallowing them are now in the reporter's pocket book that is if the sharp fragments have not cut their way out. So this disproves any theory that the alleged glass was a clever imitation manufactured out of gelatine, clarified and made brittle, to represent the real article. The gelatine would, of course, do the man no harm; but would in fact prove rather nourishing. Another theory is that the per-former had previously been a sword swal-lower, thereby having made his throat sociallious that the glass would not ent on its pas-sage to the stomach; but this does not explain how it is digested. From all this, know-ing that the glass does not stay in his mouth, and being equally certain that it can not go into his stomach, there is but one conclusion to be drawn—that the glass is intercepted be-fore reaching its destination. But how can this be done? Very easily. The sword swallower educates his throat to all on the presence of a sword. The glass-eater prepares his to receive a tube of some description, which probably has a strainer on the end to allow the water which he drinks until such time as he can dispose of it without being ob-served. That sliver tubes can be worn in the threat we all know from the numerous instances in which they have been used in surgical operations. Meanwhile glass-cating is becoming one of the crowded profession, and it behooves the managers of dime museums

Some Anecdotes of Stonewall Jackson. Col. Henry Kyd Douglas contributes an illustrated paper on "Stonewall Jackson in Maryland," to the June Century, from which we quote as follows:

to be on the hunt for some new dietetical monstrosity. Glass eating is becoming a "chestnut."

"The next evening, Sunday, he went into Frederick for the first time to attend church, and there being no service in the Presby-terian church he went to the German Reformed. As usual he fell asleep, but this time more soundly than was his wont. His head sunk upon his breast, his cap dropped from his hands to the floor, the prayers of the congregation did not disturb him, and only the choir and the deep-toned organ awakened him. Afterwards I learned that the minister was credited with much loyalty and courage because he had prayed for the president of the United States in the very presence of Stonewall Jackson. Well, the presence of Stonewall Jackson. Well, the general didn't hear the prayer, and if he had he would doubtless have felt like replying as General Ewell did, when asked at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, if he would permit the usual prayer for President Lincoln—'Certainiy: I'm sure he needs it.' * * "

"The troops being on the march, the general and staff rode rapidly out of town and took the head of the column. Just a few words here in regard to 'Barbara Frietchie,' a touching poem which sprang full-armed from the loyal brain of Mr. Whittier. An old, woman, by that now immortal name, from the loyal brain of Mr. Whittier. An old, woman, by that now immortal name, did live in Frederick in those days, but she was eighty-four years old and bed-ridden; she never saw General Jackson, and General Jackson never saw her. I was with him every minute of the time he was in that city,—he was there only twice,—and nothing like the seene so graphically described by the poet ever happened. The story will perhaps live, as Mr. Whittier has boasted, until it gets beyond the reach of correction.

"On the march that day, the captain of the cavalry advanced just ahead, had instructions to let no civilian go to the front, and we tions to let no civilian go to the front, and we entered each village we passed before the inhabitants knew of our coming. In Middletown two very pretty girls, with ribbons of red, white, and blue floating from their hair, and small flags in their hands, rushed out of their house as we passed, came to the curbstone, and with much laughter waved their colors defiantly in the face of the general. He bowed and raised his hat, and turning with his quiet smile of his staff, said: 'We evidently Lave no friends in this town.' And this is about the way he would have treated Barbara Frietchie!

Springfield's 250th Anniversary.

Springfield, Mass., will on the 25th and 25th of the present month celebrate the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of its settle ment. Its first name was Agawam, which was changed to Springfield in 1638, when William Pynchon, whose residence in Englan was called Springfield, was chosen magistrate. The most interesting event in the history of the place is the fact of its total degruction in 1675, during King Philip's war.

Its present population, which is about 35,000, is largely engaged in employments su tained by the federal government. The celebration exercises will consist of literary and historical addresses, a banquet, a concert, historica and trade processions and an out-door illumi

A First Contradiction.
