LANCASTER, JULY 1. 1886.

The Republican Ticket.

There is nothing surprising or unexpected about the Republican state nominations made at Harrisburg on Wednesday. The minees are mostly well known and, with one exception, they were conspicuously slated by the party bosses for their respective places a long time ago. Gen. Beaver is the same man who headed the ticket in 1882, when it was beaten by the protest of some forty thousand of his own party against his selection, although named with nearly the same apparent unanimity as characterized the convention this year. Since that time he has done nothing to strengthen himself in the judgment of the people of the commonwealth. He has taken no position on any question of vital interest to the state that displays his fitness to be its chief executive. Last year when the question of enforcing the state constitution against corporate encroachment came up. on the impulse of the moment and pressed by the clamor of his paighbors, he once found voice to declare himself ; but when he found that he had given offense to the corporations and the bosses of his party, he be took himself to the political battle-fields of Ohio ; and when he came back to Pennsylvania he remained mute as a clam through the balance of the campaign upon its foremost issue. Since 1882 he has persistently sought renomination and has blown hot and cold to secure it. His speech upon being introduced to the convention was an inane performance, characteristic of him. It was filled with platitudes about the banner and the flag, the underlying principles and the grand old party. That is all there is of him. A very large proportion of the people of his party who opposed him four years ago have never changed their minds nor acknowledged their mistake: and of those who supported him most loyally then a great many regret his present candidacy and have as little confidence in his success as they have in his political sagacity or his judgment upon public affairs.

Norris is a pet and protege of Quay. He has been governor's secretary, supreme court reporter, state senator and pension agent. He trades upon his pretentious patriotism and campaign oratory ; he is ut terly without the qualities demanded for the important office to which he aspires; and with Quay as state treasurer nothing would suit him better and nothing could be worse for the commonwealth than Norris for auditor general.

Stewart is another person who makes capital out of his super-loyalty; he had a few weeks experience in the war, many years of the peace period in the Grand Army of the Republic, and a term in the legislature. He suits the Quay regime, and would be well adjusted to its machinегу.

About the only weak thing the convention was saved from doing, because left more to itself in the matter, was the nomination of Dr. W. B. Roberts, for congressman-at-large. Upon that Quay resolved some time ago, " for boodle only." The ticket, as constituted, did not promise to yield much money for the campaign ; Quay wanted it, and he found a weak and willing victim in Roberts. But this was a little too much for the party. It gagged at the dose, and Quay did not insist very strongly. Osborne having been elected before was nominated again ; and the ticket of five names is left without a ingle one from west of the Allegheny ntains.

a distinct regions of the state, the lumber, oil and great manufacturing centres, are lacking representation. Embracing nearly half the counties, many of them strongholds of Republicanism and containing its most variable party strength, this western section will resent the slight put upon it. But its geographical dis-tribution is not the greatest weakness of the Republican ticket.

The Democrats can do better ; much better.

The Republican Platform.

The declaration of principles adopted by the Republican state convention is the patchwork of demagogues and trimmers trying to conceal what they think, and to catch votes by clap-trap and evasion. Its arrangement lacks cohesion, as much as its declarations lack cogency and consistency. John Cessna, Thomas V. Cooper and Mat. how S. Quay, alarmed at the increasing proarganization of Wolfe's candidacy, have island to head them off by favoring the submission of a prohibition amendment, not be submit they think it right or because by engaging in a tariff conflict on the state ticket, particularly when such contest prom-ises no results and will lend no aid to the cause for which we are contending. State officers don't make or revise tariffs, nor ad-just revenues for the national gov-ernment, and it would, therefore, be worse than foolisb, to run such officers on a radical tariff reform platform.  * Let us go into the contest for state officers without any contaminant agent of the state officers without any entangling question of federal policy. Let the issue be solely upon the question of a clean cut and pure administra-tion; an enforcement of the constitution in all its provisions; a continuance of the reforms so auspiciously begun under Governor Pattison, and we will win victory; for the people, the great conservative element of the people, will appraid such a platform and support a good ticket put up to carry out such principles.

The views of the Age will be the view of ninety-nine hundredths of the Democratic party in this state. There will be no sympathy with those, who, never in the habit of recognizing party ties, except when it suits their own interest, would use the tariff question to rend the state Democracy. The men who want to read one half, or one quarter, or one-tenth of their fellow voters out of the Democratic party, will

THE Beaver ticket was the first named in 1882.

THE Republican conventions and bloody shirt orators who think they are making capital by assailing Cleveland's pension vetoes, are mistaken. The Chicago News, a paper of largest circulation in the metropolis of the Northwest, puts it thus : President Cleveland's pension vetoes only needed such a cheap and blatant attack as that made on them by Congressman Bayne to prove their true metal. The more they are bammered by such unreasoning wrath the clearer will their honest tone sound in the ears of the nation, which is weary of buncombe excuses for raids upon the treas-ury. Mr. Bayne contented himself with a general attack upon the vetoes. He did not attempt to justify the flood of relief bills or defend the reckless and uniformed manner in which Congress stands charged of voting away public funds. It is nothing to the point that the president was not himself a soldier; that he never imperiled his life in the war; that he walked in safety the unheroic path of peace. The question involved in all these pension bills is : "Is the bene-ficiary honestly and of right entitled to the nation's grateful recognition ?"

THE Republican convention, determined to "get it all in," adopted a dreary lot of twaddle called "a tariff address," prepared by one of those peripatetic bores who afflict conventions with their effusive productions. The Record points out that this address omits to mention "the revision of the tariff in 1857, when the Republicans had a majority in the House of Representatives, with N. P. Banks for speaker, and Lewis D Campbell, of Ohio, as chairman of the committee on ways and means. That Republican tariff revision reduced the Democratic free trade' tariff of 1846 from an average of 25 per cent. to an average of 19 per cent.' Our esteemed contemporary also points out that it is no reproach to a country that its im ports exceed its exports ; and no nation evergot rich any other way. In the period end-ing in 1861 the tonnage of the United States in the foreign trade to and from its ports was 67 per cent. The American merchant marine was flourishing, and the apparent balance of imports consisted largely of the country's gains in foreign commerce. The boasted bal-ance of exports between 1870 and 1850 consisted largely in payments of debts and in

A Blind Man Playing Whist. From the Providence Journal, June 27. A quiet passenger in the smoking car going out of Providence the other day, whom several of those seated near him had noted to several of those search that consultation with be blind, spoke up, atter a consultation with his companion, and asked if "anybody here would take a hand in a game of whist." A would take a hand in a game of whist" A smile that was almost audible went around the car, and ad amused murmur was provoked at the other end when the word reached them that there was a blind man aboard who wanted somebody to play whist with him. A party was made up, however, and in it the whole attention of the car was concentrated. And the blind man and his partner led their adversaries 15 points in about as many minutes, playing with a pack of cards with raised "spots," the three players who had their eyesight naming their cards as they played them.

The men clung to the keel for some time, but suddenly the boat gave a for some time, but suddenly the boat gave a lurch and went down. The men could all swim and struck out for the shore, some five miles away. One by one they became exhausted and sank, until finally only two were left, and these were rescued -more dead than alive—by two men who were rowing in a dory not far from Ram Island. The names of the men rescued are Frederick Recom-mendus and Bernard McCormick. Those lost are Thomas Crane, John McCreely, Hugh Donohue and William Curran, all of Boston.
