AT A COCK FIGHT.

How This Diversion is Carried On in the City of Brotherty Love. The following apt description of a cock fighting adventure in Philadelphia is from the pen of one whose experience richly enables him to write correctly on the subject : The first thing is to secure an invitation to see a Philadelphia cock fight. You then buy your ticket and if you are wise you buy an excursion ticket. Then you in due course of time reach Philadelphia; you meet your friend who assures you everything will be perfectly sate; that upon the first appearance of "cops" there will be a gun fired which will give everyone time to reach a place of will give everyone time to reach a place of security; that the "cops" cannot approach within a mile of the battle grounds unknown. As the bour approaches, you are notified to be ready, which means about 10 drinks. For it is a thirsty crowd, and each man feels he must set 'em up before leaving the bar. A short ride in the horse cars and a long walk over dusty, dirty roads in the broiling sun a last deposits you on the battle-ground where inst deposits you on the battle-ground where your respectable appearance is the signal for a general scattering of the clans, whose fears are soon calmed by your riesed so vouching for your being all right. There is the usual wrangle before the first fight, but at last two cocks are in the pit. It is a long fight, but your friend's bird wins and you are $5 ahead. Two more cocks are nitted; your friend again wins.

pitted; your friend again wins.

Another pair are quickly produced, with same result. You are now $15 ahead and become reckless and your opponents demoralized. You have hard work to put $10 exceeds and your opponents demoralized. You have hard work to put $10 out on the fourth fight, although your opponents have the advantage of a two-eyed cock against a one-eyed "or blinker" bird.

The blinker is a fighter and in about five minutes has the other cock at his mercy.
You congratulate yourself on being $10 more ahead when bang goes a gun. That's the last you see of your $10, as the stakeholder disappears over the swamps.

As the gun went off, to speak in the first person, so did I, and thanks to my fleetness of foot, I took a leading position, heading for a small tavern a short distance away, where there was a dance going on. As 1 drew near I noticed a number of men flitting through the dancers and some running towards me with pistols in their hands which they were firing in the air. I could see they were offifiring in the air. I could see they were offi-cers, and as other officers were close behind men and as other officers were close behind me I gave myself up for lost, stopped run-ning and started back, walking quietly, and momentarily expecting to feel an officer's gripon my arm and to hear those soothing little words "you're my prisoner." It was my first experience in the officer line, and I would like to testify right here to the sensation being anything but pleasant. I may become more hardened as time rolls along, but I have no ambition to try it again. may become more hardened as time relisations, but I have no ambition to try it again. To resume. As I strolled quietly along, officer after officer ran past me, I was walking along a canal and it was just alive with men struggling through the water and mud. One poor fellow got into deep water and would have been drowned, had not one of his triends who had sately crossed come back and rescued him from drowning, but not from the clutches of the law. They were both ordered by the officers to come out on their side and as the order was enforced by sundry pistol bullets, they came. As I stood watching the raid I was joined by one of the spectators who gave me his name, asking mine at the same time, and we immediately became as well acquainted as if we had known each other for years.

As we stood there the officers collected their prisoners and one of them said "what's the matter with those two." We immediately protested our innocence, and one big officer said, "Oh, they are all right," and they all moved off, we following for a short distance. We sately got back to Philadelphia entirely satisfied with our experience.

Forger Captured.

Last week a man entered the express office at Wrightsville, forged the name of A. R. Detective Simons found the forger and arrested him. Part of the goods were recovered. Officer Wilson, of Wrightsville, recognized the man as a party who had been in his town several weeks and started home with him. His name is W. F. Haissinger. He registered as W. J. Hamilian.

The Chicago Rathway Age, in an article on Foreclosure Sales and Receiverships for Six Months," says: While the financial condition of the railways of the United States has been gradually improving for the last two or three years, the results of the previous de-pressions have contined to be shown in the closing out by foreclosure sales of many railway companies which had for some time been in the hands of the courts. The record of foreclosure sales for the year 1885 showed a large increase over the pre-vious year, and that for the first six 1885 showed a large increase over the pre-vious year, and that for the first six months of 1886, which we now present, ap-pears, on the face, still more discouraging. It is as follows: Total of seventeen roads having a mileage of 5,122 miles, bended debt of $163,550,000, capital stock of $128,070,000. It will be seen that on its face this is the worst showing which has been made in connection with railway fore-closure during a corresponding period for closure during a corresponding period for many years. It already greatly exceeds in respect to mileage and capital our record of foreclosures for the whole of 1885, when the number of roads was twenty-two, with 5,15 number of roads was twenty-two, with 5,166 miles of lines and an apparent capital account of $278,494,000. In the previous year, 1884, foreclosure sales had reached the lowest aggregate for ten years, only fifteen roads having been sold, and these mostly very short lines, aggregating only 710 miles, with the comparatively small capital of $23,500,000. It was shown, however, that a new crop of restreeting was there cannot be reached. ceiverships was then coming in, and that foreclosure saies would increase in the following years. It is gratifying, however, to find that a comparatively small amount of new work is being laid out for receivers. We have compiled a table showing com-panies which passed into the bands of the courts thus far during the present year. The total of seven roads, with a courts thus far during the present year. The total of seven roads, with a mileage of 1,284 miles, and a bonded and stock investment of $45,316,000, is much less than has been shown under the head of receiverships for a similar period in many years. Compared with the first six months of 1884, when 36 roads, with a total of 6.43 niles of line and nearly $348,000,000 of capita is certainly a very encouraging show-ing. While the dreary and costly pro-cess of lingering in the hands of the courts and then of passing to the auction block, where a large part of their securities will be wiped out by the merciless act of foreclosure, is still inevitably waiting in the near future a large number of our railways, there is cer-tainly ground for hope that better methods
