Pat People and Fluids

The question whether water is lattening or otherwise has been much discussed. Formerly it was generally asserted that the victims of obesity should mortify the flesh and reduce the fat by abstaining as much as possi ble from liquids and remaining in a continual duce the fat by abstaining as much as possible from liquids and remaining in a continual state of thirst. Latterly the opposite has been affirmed and I am told that a reduction of weight is one of the results claimed by "the hot water cure," provided always the water is taken as hot as possible, painfully hot, and in great quantities.

Experiments have been made in Paris by Dr. Debove which controvert both these doctrines. These experiments indicate that provided the same amount of solid food is taken large quantities of water make a man neither thinner nor fatter. They were carefully made on a friend who took weighed quantities of food daily, and while these remained equal doubling the quantity of water had no measurable effect on the weight of the body. Still it is quite possible that the old theory of thirst cure and the new theory of hot water cure may both be correct. Both violate the natural conditions of health. Scalding hot water, like ten or coffee or grog of similar temperature, unquestionably injures the teeth, the stomach and other organs concerned in the early stages of digestion, and it is very probable that deficiency of liquid impedes the latter stages, whereby the chyme, by the aid of the digesting fluids, becomes converted into chyle and blood.

A fat man may easily become thinner by injuring his health. "Banting" is dangerous, as many who have fairly tried can prove. The difficult problem is to reduce the fat without reducing the strength at the same time. A skillful trainer will undertake to bring any man down to his "lighting weight," a. to the best condition for violent exertion, but as soon as the discipline of the trainer is relaxed the obesity, when constitutional, re-

Le. to the best condition for violent exertion, but as soon as the discipline of the tramer is relaxed the obesity, when constitutional, returns; and a long continuance of high training is murderous. Perhaps the old prescription, "Keep your mouth shut and your eyes open," when followed with judicious limitations, is the best. Eat less, sicep less, and walk more, are safe injunctions, provided they are obeyed in moderation.

such Is Fame. The Pall Mall Gazette remarks that while the French have during the last three months been erecting monuments and statues to poets, philosopher, generals, and sergeants and all sorts of personages in want of a piece of stone to perpetuate their memory, it seems that there is lying in an obscure atelier a Paris a statue of a great Frenchman, made and ready for erecting, but for which a stand and ready for erecting, but for which a stand cannot be found. The statue is that of Thiers, founder of the Third Republic. Several years ago the late M. Clesinger, a first-class sculptor, finished a statue of Thiers, the cost of which was defrayed by public subscrip-tion. The family of the sculptor put the statue at the disposal of the municipal coun-cil of Paris, but that angust body refused to erect it on the Place de la Bourse, the site chosen, or anywhere clse, though its erecerect it on the Flace de la Bourse, the site echosen, or anywhere else, though its erection had been decided upon by a decree of the president on the recommendation of the preceding administration. Now an apreal comes from Marseilles for the statue. But Thiers is hardly going to receive honor from bis natal town, for it is proposed to stow away the statue in a museum. Fortunately, Thiers, having left something behind him. s not so much in need of a statue as some
