Uncertain, coy, and hard to please And variable as the shade By the light, quivering aspen made, Pope mays :

Pope says:

Woman's at best a contradiction still.

These traits are never more strikingly illustrated than they are when marriage is proposed. One never knows exactly how this issue is to come out. He may know a young lady for years: he may have received from her decisive indications of regard; his company may always have seemed to him acceptable to her, and yet if he asks to impose it for life he is quite apt to get a sudden revelation. She, too, is utterly surprised. Was any woman ever proposed to that was not? Of ccurse, the boys and girls that marry, and that have not learned to be artful in their social fencing, melt into matrimony in the most natural and easy way. Let them wait till they have come to maturity, and have had any real taste of society experience, and they become at once critics and difficult to lease. The experienced girl or woman, too is a great stickler for conventionality for the strictest ediquette.

She would not have it known for the world.

is a great stickler for conventionality for the strictest etiquette.

She would not have it known for the world that she had made an aggressive step toward matrimony. In some cases she never does. If she has received an offer, and has even done a pleasant thing for the gentleman without being asked to do it, such as pinning a bonquet on the lappel of his coat or working a pair of slippers for him, she at once sets about a system of self-examination. What if some one would think (horrible thought!) that she had been trying to capture him? If she thinks he thinks so, she has a suspiction that, on accepting him, he will despise her for all the rest of her life. If she thinks another woman thinks so of her, she will feel that she is to be the perpetual target for scorn another woman thinks so of her, she will reet that she is to be the perpetual target for scorn henceforth. In many cases she would rather escape a suitable match and live and die an old maid than be married and give ground to the remotest idea that her own manage-mant had any part in such a result.

old maid than be married and give ground to the remotest idea that her own management had any part in such a result.

The fearful uncertainty of what a woman will say when her hand is sought for in marriage makes the ordeal of seeking it the most difficult of performance. Any man can ask any woman to marry him whom he does not wish to marry, but to ask the right one is the hardest conceivable performance. There are men that could have gone into the murderous charge of Balaklava easier than they could seek a partner for life. For the marriage refusal always imperils. Many and mysterious are the ways in which men try to spell out the secrets of their adored one's heart, but they can never quite know them. They may affect the company of her brother or of her confidential girl friends, but how little they pick up from either. Vague and shadowy are all intimations by these methods. They can only know by absolute trial, by putting the fated question point-blank.

But there is no preparation that leads up to this, where jutting the question is not a big jump over a yawning gulf. There are few places where it can be done without fear of some interruption, or where it is not marred by some trivial or ridiculous surroundings. In the parlor a door may be suddenly opened. On the road, riding together, you may meet company, or a coal cart. It takes a good deal of diplomacy and art to put the question. But a frown or a repulsive manner can easily extinguish it.

If it fails, the curious and unfortunate result will be to leave matters worse than they previously were. The young lady, promising to be still your friend, is less a friend than before. She actually retreats, to some extent, from the intimacy and friendship that were before graciously accepted.

She grows shy of you, and feels it necessary to step backward in order to check a possible new advance.

It seems as if women, eyen when the man of their choice appears, wish to make the capture of themselves difficult. Whether they rejoice in this momentary power, or expect to be prized more highly ever after for exercising it, or both, it is a practice and policy they almost invariably adopt. A woman sometimes losses the very lover that she covets by tripping him up once; for the very best man is often the one that will never very best man is often the one that will never put himself in the way of a second refusal from the loveliest object. At the same time, one less sensitive and unrefined will stop at nothing; and after a trifle discomfiture in succession, will outdo the rule, and make three negatives equal to an affirmative an-

A perfectly frank woman in the matter of A perfectly frank woman in the matter of marriage is a marvel. No matter how truthful she is in a general way, or how lovely her character, the social traditions that are in vogue train her to a certain deception. She even deceives herself. When a man has paid attention to a woman for a year or more, no one size its surprised that he proposes to her. Noother woman that knows the circumstances is, in fact; but she always is.

Frightful Waste.

Consumption carries off its thousands of vic-tims every year. Yes, thousands of human lives are being wasted that might be saved, for the fact is now established that consumption, in; its early stages, is curable. Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" will if used in time, effect a permanent cure. It has no equal as a remedy for bronchitis, coughs and colds its efficacy has been proved in thousands of cases. All druggists.

"For there was never yet a philosopher, that could endure the toothache patiently." Perham-not—but there's a little wit in endaring it at all, when one bottle of Salvation Oil will cure it. If foot-ball players will rub with St. Jucobs On they will not feel any stiffness next day.

Miserable and sleepless nights are unknown when Dr. Hann's Colic cure soothes baby to sleep without stupefying it with opium. Price, 25 cents. No griping, Dz. Hand's Pleasant Physic never disturbs sleep nor operates till after breakfast
