Beside the way the elm trees grow, The sunset made each left aglow. It gilt her hair, her brow of snow,
Where the golden rod was blooming

Ltook ber little hand in mine; Sweet, be not to my love unkind, Hve me this fair, white hand of thine," Where the golden rod was waving."

Latooped to hear what she would say, Alas, I feared it would be may! She murmured, "Tes," (ch,)oyful d y !) Where the golden-rod was nodding. The frost had touched each leaf and vine, It turned them red, like choicest wine, When came bright wedding day of name.

Where the golden rod was fading. On my bride's fair hair sweet flowers rest Oh, happy sight, for me most blest!
And roses blushed upon her breast,
Where the golden-rod was dying.

A "Blarsted Britisher" on Our Girls.

From the Washington Herald.

The first impressions of intelligent foreign to us as a nation are always interesting. I met last week a young Eng lish gentleman who has been making quiet tour throughout the United States, and as there is a little romance therewith I think it will interest you. "What most im-pressed you?" I asked him, after a comfortspressed you?" I asked him, after a comforta-ble dinner, and as we sat with a cigar. "Well," he replied, after a thoughtful pause, " not the greatness of your country, though I was surprised enough to find prosperous cities two thousand miles away from your seaboard, and the handsomest little theatre I have ever seen anywhere was in Denver. The most astonishing feature of the United States to me is its young feature of the United States to me is its young women—young ladies you call them I notice. From New port and Lenox to the little watering-places all over your country they are the same—oright, audacious, sweetly bewildering. They need no chapprones, for they are strong in their own innocence. Their wit, their esprit, is a revelation to us from the older civilization. They think no evil, and their brightness, cleverness, and quick sense of the ludicrous is unlike anything I ever imagined in feminine character. Why, in their knowledge of political matters alone they almost take one's breath sway. I can now understand how it is that they are so fascinating to people outside of their own recountry, and are taking the best matrimonial catches away from our girls at home. In catches away from our girls at home. In dress they have the taste of a parisian dame, with a cult of their own.

An Eccentric Passenger.

There is a woman in New York, who is very fond of riding back and forth in the ferryboats. Before the boat gets out of the slip a black and tan dog about the size of a rat creeps into her lap from her pocket or some other place of refuge in her bosom a handkerchief tied in a bunch and carefully handkerchief tied in a bunch and carefully opens it, talking meanwhile in an undertone. The dog snifts at the handkerchief, sirs it with his feet, and gives vent to a bark out of all proportion to his size. Two little white mice, not more than two inches long, jump out and chase each other all over the dog, who barks and snaps playfully at them. The mice, getting fired of the dog, run up the woman's arm and hide in the heavy tresses hanging upon her neck. All the way across the river she talks constantly to the animals, calling them pet names and caressing them. Though she speaks cheerfully to her companions, and seems amused by their antics, she never laughs. When the bell rings for the engine to stop, she folds the mice in the handkerchief after kissing them, put them back in her bosom, and then the dog returns to his hiding place.

Population, Revenue and Expenditures. The treasury department publishes a state ment of the population of the United States and the net revenue and net expenditures o the government for the last fiscal year, with the government for the last used year, with the per capita of revenues and expenditures. The population is given at 58,420,000 and the net revenue at $356,430,727, being a per capita of 5.76, or .08 greater than the fiscal year of 1885. The expenditures were $242,483,138—a per capita of 4.15, or .24 less than that of th previous year.

Danger Ahead:

There is danger shead for you if you neglect the warnings which nature is giving of the approach of the fell destroyer—consumption. Night sweats, spitting of blood loss of appetite—these symptoms have a terrible meaning. You can be cured if you do not wait until it is too late.
