Eloping With a Colored Coachman In a bandsome extrage at Maplewood, near South Orange, N. J., lives John Comstock, well-to-do New York broker. Mr. Comstool has a daughter, Sarah, aged twenty, a handsome, intelligent girl, whose mother died in giving her tutth. She lived at the house with li tie company save her father and an aged colored servant. Three months ago Mr. omstock hired a coachman. He was a tall, fine-looking muiatto about twenty one year fine-looking mulatto about twenty-one years old, and an expert horseman. Sarah took an interest in the new coachman at once, and became setzed with a desire to learn to ride on horseback. Mr. Comstock yielded to her desire, and purchased two saddle-horses. Thereafter she took daily rides, accompanied by the young coachman. Last Thursday Mr. Comstock waited at breaktast for his daughter. As she did not appear, he went to her room to call her, and receiving no reply, he opened the door. The room was empty. On the girl's bureau tay a letter addressed to her father. It read:

"DEAR PA: I love Archie very much, and knowing you wouldn't agree to our marriage, I left your home and am going to live with my sweetheart. Forgive me, dear ps, and don't take any steps to prosecute us. Yours,

The letter staggered the father, and it wa some time before he could compretend its meaning. It was soon discovered that the saddle horses were not in the stable, the eloping pair having ridden off on them. Mr. Comstock made no report of the elopement to the police, and expressed his intention to take no steps whatever in the matter. He felt assured that she would get enough of her new relationship and be willing to return remarkable accident happened at Catskill, N. Y., on Friday. A man was deliver-ing a barrel of flour at a house near the east end of the bridge of the West Shore railroad, which spans Catakill creek. The house is built near the brink of the rock, which has a precipitous descent of more than 100 feet. The horse took fright and backed suddenly, and, to the indescribable horror of those wh witnessed the accident, disappeared with its driver over the cliff.

After falling about hair the distance the wagon was caught by the timbs of a tree, the horse hanging head downward, suspended in the air. The driver, who had held on to the wagon, now descended the tree, and the horse, by its struggles, broke the harness, and, rolling over several times, brought up against the stump of another tree on a nar-row ledge of rock. It was brought down with considerable difficulty, but not mate-rially harmed by the adventure.

The Coal Monopolists From the New York Herald.

If the man who is well to do pays five dol lars or more for a top of coal how much does it cost the poor man who buys it by the

The winter is at our doors. Jack Front has already made us a flying visit, and soon he will write his name on the window panes. Unless there is coal in the grate the children in ten thousand lowly homes will freeze and young men will seek the warmth of the saloon. The want of fuel for four months in the year will drive women to despair and men to crime. It the laborer who earns his dollar a day is compelled to pay at the rate of six or seven dollars a ton for coal, be-cause be buys it in small quantities, who is at fault?

The coal companies consist of men already rish, but anxious to be richer. They have raised the price of coal by combining for that purpose. By the spring they will each be able to build a new house out of their profits, but by the spring there will be a good many funerals because wages are low and coal is dear. That's the whole story, and an nfamous story it is.
