LANCASTER, DECEMBER 7, 1886. The Message.

There is nothing especially novel in the cs of the message or their treatment. be president's views are well known and here was no opportunity for surprises. He usely and strongly maintains all his posios and makes a somewhat elaborate arent on the vexed question of the tariff nich ever affords so much food for words d yet really calls for so little action. The dent is in thorough sympathy with ne reform. He believes that the s are heavier than the needs of the ry require, and that the import duuld be lowered. The ardent pro ist, who bawls at every suggestion of lowered duty, will find a red flag in the message. The president's decided position alongside the secretary of the treasury's greeing with the known views of the ma-ority of the Democratic representatives. s no doubt of the Democratic position on the tariff, and assures some reduction a the tariff revenue at this session, though ft may be only in the wool duty, which the party can well unite in voting.

The president reports us at peace with all the world, the Mexican and Canadian ates being hardly big enough to rustle as national equanimity. Mexico's preons, however, to judge crimes comitted on our territory, needs to have a letus put upon it, which doubtless can e done by negotiation.

It is well we are at peace, because we we hardly any navy and no army to of. Over in Europe the great states have their standing armies up to such size that they have to go to war to get rid of them. They lack the dollars to endure the drain. Here we are troubled with too many dollars. Financially we are wonderfully strong; though the ideas upor ice might be stronger. The suggestion that there is no need to coin silver dollars to store them, and no decency in putting off at a hundred cents a dollar worth about seventy, should be able to make an impres sion ou Congress that will stop the fraudu lent folly. The more silver we buy and coin, and store away, the cheaper i seems to get. Our efforts to bull the market, is a failure and one would think that even the silver statesmen would be discourged by the result of their undertaking to up their constituents' silver mines into the treasury of the country.

The president's views on ocean mail service cannot be taken to favor subsidy as that term is generally understood. The only excuse for subsidy is the encourageat of a certain line of business in the hope that it may be so strengthened as to be able to stand eventually without govsemment support. It is an advanced form of the doctrine of protection that has recoived but little favor in this country because it is so open to abuse.

Ass motive for government support of ocean steamship lines the president gives the securing of postal service, "necessary and proper and not otherwise obtainable. To this no exception can be taken, for the postal service must be rendered as efficient s possible, but the question most naturally arises: is there any land with which posta parvice is necessary, and therefore proper, and yet not obtainable without paying a price for it that would reach subsidy pro-

The message indicates the Argentine Republic and Brazil as fulfilling these con-ditions, the mail to both countries passing by way of England, and therefore occupya about double the time really necessary. The mail between these countries and our own may not be very large, but if there was a direct exchange, with the United States of the products of South and North America-instead of being largely through the medium of English houses-it would reach most respectable proportions. The ident rightly says that a wise extension of our postal service "may lead to timulating intercourse and become the harbinger of a profitable traffic." This is principle that has long been recognized in the establishment of postal routes in the far West, where many a mining camp and sment owes a large share of success to the government postal service.

The Treasury Report. The report of the secretary of the treasary is a very vigorous document which will be read with great interest for its decided saling with great political issues. It very slaborately reviews the bi-metallic question, taking a strong bi-metalic position. It ands, however, that the policy of this try will lead it to a stoppage of the see and coinage of silver, that the ations of the world may sooner be brought to a realization of the need of both silver and gold as legal standards of value. Itoes not recommend further effort to seare a conference among the nations upon question, until the cessation of silver mees, in favor of a bi-metalic cur-

The secretary declares that the United States needs to reduce revenues, now that she can no longer find investment for her surplus in redeeming her bonds, save by their purchase at an enormous premium. And the plan for reduction he finds in the import duties on raw materials, which are levied alone by us of all nations. Free trade he declares no man will ever see in this country, which must raise its revenues from the imports, leaving direct taxation generally to the states. Taxes on raw materials are destructive of the labor interest. We pay the highest wages here and consequently have the best labor and the best machinery, and as a further consequence. the lowest cost of labor in the manufactured article. That the highest paid labor ensures the lowest labor cost, is an economical discovery that will place this nation in the leading manufacturing rank as soon as the raw materials of manufacture are relieved of tax; which is going right into the armory of the high tariff people for the weapon to do them to death. We trust that there are more than one in a hundred thousand of the people of this country who will be able to reach an understanding of the economical questions which the secretary discusses and determines for himself with so much firmness; and as to the final recommendation that Congress shall pass an act, pure and simple, to take the duty off wool, we think that there will be general approval. There is nothing very difficult to understand in the statement that free wool, meaning cheap clothing, is needed by the people; and everyone knows that w of cultivation is not an industry that very many people are concerned protecting.

Von Moltke's Speech.

The importance that is given to Count Von Moltke's speech in the foreign dispatches, and the evident consternation at its grave tone, show the overpowering weight of Germany in the affairs of Europe. The speeches of the Austro-Hangarian ministers were of far more serious tone, but they did not arouse half the consternation described as following the appeal of Von Meltke for the passage of the septennate. This was because it was well known that Austria would not dare to act without the approval of Germany, and the latter power has acquired so strong a military reputation that its strol of war or peace has been conceded.

Von Moltke's speech intimates that the military superiority of Germany has been overestimated, and that if the unity of the empire is to be maintained it must be dearly paid for. His statement that even a rich country could not long bear the heavy expense of the military establishments maintained by the neighbors of Germany and that decisive events must therefore happen at an early date, proves that the German rulers see that the people will not much longer bear this heavy drain, and are letermined, by force of arms or reason, to bring about a general reduction of standing armies.

This one sentence of the speech has sore in it than any public utterance of European statesmen for many a day. It shows that the effort for a better adjustment of affairs is to be made at an early date, and that if the reputation and power of Germany cannot overawe her neighbors, she will have to put them to actual se in a war for peace with lower taxes. If it were not for the French and Russian lesire to win territory, there might be a way out of the difficulty without war, but he young men of both nations have been raised with the idea of conquest firmly rooted, and neither will cease to menace the peace of Germany until they have won or est forever the Rhine provinces and the Dardanelles. The German government usists upon a provision for the army for seven years, long before the last seven years are ended, and gives as a reason the urgency of the situation. Is it a wonder that all Europe is alarmed?

THE demand for chesp literature is growing. During the first six months of this ear 54,299 hundred weight valued at £496. 68, were exported from Great Britain. Durng the same time last year 52,858 bundred weight were exported at a value of $516,266.

FATHER PHILIP J. DUFFY, of New York, as a ble job on his hands in trying to kill the fushion of wearing frizzes and bangs in the schools of his parish. The girls must wear their hair plain and off their foreheads and not over their eves like a poodle. All he students trangressing will have ten points taken off their weekly report; those persisting in disobeying will be suspended. Those who obey the order will have ten points credited to them.

Nor long ago an eminent English geologist in reporting to his government on the dia mond fields of South Africa said that the geological formation was very much like that t a part of the state of Kentucky, and that in his opinion diamonds would eventually be found in that state. This statement has naturally stimulated investigation of the geology of Kentucky and an amateur geologist announces that he has at last found a small patch of ground consisting of a coarse gravel resembling that described by the geolo gist. In Africa diamonds were first found in small quantities on the surface of these patches and on digging deeper they became more numerous and valuable; but, as the conglomerate hardened with the increase of depth, the mining of them became very expensive. That the Kentucky man has found a pocket like those of south Africa there is no doubt, but whether he will find anything in it of value is very doubtful. The mountaineers of Kentucky are well known to possess a fair share of intelligence, if not complied with education and respect for law, and it is hardly likely that so valuable a secre would long remain hidden from them as it did from the stolid boors of south Africa.

WAYSIDE GLANCE .

The sudden plunge into the rigor of mid winter weather is very pleasant for the small boy with a sied, the young man with a best girl and the liveryman with plenty of sleight to hire. But it will fall with great severity upon many of the poor of the city. The well housed, the well-fed and the well-feld should give a thought to their poor brethren in the present situation. The Dorcas society, which has done an incalculable amount of good by its intelligent distribution of charity, reports itself nearly out of funds and provisions.
Those who respond to its appeal for aid will have the satisfaction of knowing that only the most worthy subjects receive the consideration of the society. All donations of any kind should be sent to the Ireasurer, Mis Annie Hurtord, No. 207 East Orange street. If left at the INTELLIGENCER office, the same will be promptly forwarded to its destination.

will be promptly forwarded to its destination And while on this subject of charity, why And while on this subject of charity, why does not this town hold a charity ball? It is one of the most successful as well as beautiful means of raising funds for the poor. It has been proved an easy task to have a siveral housand minds and that much important the understanding of one in a indired thousand minds and that much important, which has been the stumbling the feativity a charitable impulse. There are people to whom it would never occur to give directly to the poor who would cheer-raily contribute to a scheme of this kind, and disancing for charity would lend a new charm to the art terpsichorean. The late E. Price Greenleaf, who died in Boston Saturday, and who has left the bulk of his $400,000 or $500,000 estate to Harvard college, was a miserly man whose theory concerning poverty was the more you help poverty the more poverty there will be. He never forgot the division his uncle Daniel made of the poor, that there were three classes, the Lord's poor, the devil's poor, and the poor devils. The Lord's poor were the victims of extenuating circumstances, the devil's poor extenuating circumstances, the devil's poor became poor through their devilment, and the poor devils were made so by their indo-
