LANGASTER, DECEMBER 17, 180

A Scheme for Shins.

We are now doing a large business with th America by way of Europe, in spite of the fact that the distance across the an affords protection to the European apufacturers against our competition If direct lines of steamers were established he condition would be reversed in our favor use we are nearer to the market by a ousand miles.

This state of affairs seems to give great orce to the plea for a subsidized line of pers, but the principle of subsidy is too dangerous a one to make its recognition advisable; though the line may be estabished with the delivery of mail as its ground for government encouragement.

The New York Herald, however, comes along with an idea contributed by Mr. Corbin who runs the Long Island railroad and who has long contemplated running a ine of fast steamers from the end of it at Montauk to the port of Milford Haven in Wales, the nearest port of England. Corbin is the man of affairs who has a knack at rehabilitating railroads, and who is now deep in the effort to recover Reading, encouraged by his success in restoring the Long Island road. He does not, however, seem to see sure money in the scheme to connect with Europe, and he seeks to have the government come to its aid. Mr. Corbin works for money before glory, and thinks that the government works for glory before money, as it generally does. He thinks it would be much to the glory of the government to build very staunch and fast steamships, such as it would need in the event of war, and rent them to him during peace to connect his Montauk with Milford Haven.

It seems, at first blush, to be a sufficiently cheeky scheme on Mr. Corbin's part; and the impression does not die away in its further consideration. But there is merit in the idea that the government should build fast steamships, for commercial use in peace, and war use in war. . It wants war vessels in war and has little use for them in peace. It wants sailors in war, and in peace needs to have them ready for war. Therefore if it can build and manships for commercial use, that would be efficient for it in war, should it not do it. especially since its own merchants cannot build them because they cannot be built here as cheap as in Europe. As the taxation laid by the government forbids its merchants to build ships, the government must provide them if they are to be pro-

And the government has a commercial use for ships in peace in carrying its mails. It has this additional good reason for providing them. We know no good reason why it should not build ocean vessels ready to be made ocean cruisers when needed and let them out to be run for commercial uses by the highest and best bidders. Mr. Corbin cannot have them built for himself especially, but if he can afford to pay more to the government for them than anybody else he should get them.

The Wall Street Flurry.

The stocks on Wall street tumbled very heavily for a couple of days and they said the street had the biggest panic since that of seventy-three. They always exaggerate things in New York, however, and t was not much of a shower after all, for only one concern went to pieces under the

The peculiarity of the entertainment was that it was wholly confined to New York city, the bourses of the other great cities of the country being about as calm as the wintry mornings of the week. Their brokers looked on at New York and sent her their money to get the hundred per cent, rates that were offered for its use over night; for money was cheap enough outside of New York, and the Philadelphia banks had plenty to lend at five and six per cent. The panic was wholly a New York affair and its occurrence shows how fully the New York stock market is divorced from the business of the country; or rather it shows how completely it is under the control of manipulators, who manipulate regardless of those interests. This trouble in Wall street was caused by the steaming up of stocks under the high pressure of cheap money and their collapse under the heavy weight of dear money, the price of the money being controlled by those who have long been accustomed to lock and unlock it to affect the prices of stocks. In all this shaking up of Wall street not a tremor has passed through any other business interest in the country, and the course of its prosperity has suffered no check at all. While stocks were falling in Wall street, iron was rising and it daily grows stronger. Wall street has wholly ceased to be a barometer of the country's business, and bas even ceased to the indicator of the prosperity of the railroads whose stocks form its main dealings. It has often been Shought that the extirpation of Wall street wall be a good thing for the country; bat now it seems to be extirpated, so far its influence on business of the country seonserned, and it remains only as the bouse of the gamblers and their vicin the community who are willing to olay against its loaded dice.

They are Dumb. Attorney General Cassidy has had before him the representatives of the great rail-roads of the state, attended by their lawyers; or rather the lawyers were there and some of the presidents; one being Mr. Harris, of the Lehigh Coal and Navigation company, who had barely answered that he was Harris before Lawyer Olmstead, who guided him, told him to decline to answer ; and Harris ever afterward was as close as a clam, and not even willing to say why he declined to answer. The fact that the refusal was made to answer the simplest questions made it perfectly clear that the railroad's lawyers were seeking to delay the inquiry, and made it equally evident that the railroads were unwilling to disclose the facts about their combination.

What power the attorney general has will certainly be fully used to uncover their conspiracy, but there remain but a few days during which Mr. Cassidy will have control of the proceedings; and it is this which gives the railroad presidents their hope of escape. There are among them, however, men who we think will not be willing to incur the public odium which will be justly theirs for refusing to answer to the commonwealth questions which are undoubtedly fair. No one can dispute that the commonwealth is entitled to the facts of the combination when it calls for them from the presidents of its great railroad corporations, who ought to be too great to be willing to conceal them. Mr. Harris, as the president of a third-rate concern dld not rise to his opportunity or show himself to be bigger than to be led against the dignity of his manhood by his lawyer President Roberts, as a greater president and man, we do not believe will so act like a calf when put upon the stand. Nor will Mr. Keim, of the Reading , they being gentlemen who know that whatever claim their companies have upon them the claim of their manhood is superior to itand they know that they cannot afford to be silent when the state asks them what they have done as stewards of the charters it

Sad times are now in store for the men who have been fighting the legislative battles of Ireland. The cold blooded, relentesspolicy of coercion by the Tory government is clearly shown in the arrest of Dillon, O'Brien, Harris and Sheeby, members of Parliament, for an alleged conspiracy to defraud. It is plain notice to all friends of Ireland that if they will not get out of the road of the coercion car, they will be run over.

The bitter anti-Irish London Times speaking of the arrests, says: "The Nationalists imagine that Sir Michael Hicks-Beach will shrink from filling the prisons with Irish priests and members of Parliament and it is the duty of the ministers to show these crafty schemers that they have miscalculated both their own strength and that of the government."

Gloomy, indeed, is the outlook, but it may be safely premised that Ireland's deliverance will be hastened in the proportion in which English tyrauny becomes more obnoxious.

A GENTLEMAN who is unseasonably warm at seventy degrees above zero, says that "Zero" should join the Board of Trade or at least withhold criticism until it gets fairly on its legs. Perhaps "Zero" is a member he seems at least to have heard its members talk. Probably he wants to give them warning in time that they may regulate their deeds by their words and not bring their institution into discredit in its infancy.

Our impression is that the Board is going to have "a high old time" in keeping its members down to the practice of home protection. It will need to start at both ends of the line and teach the Lancaster tradesmen to keep good stocks of goods at about city prices to entirle them to expect to hold the home trade. The fault of foreign buying is not attogether with the buyer

THE Causdian minister of fisheries, George E. Foster, has a way of getting himself interviewed very frequently. He is evidently led to do this by a wish to keep himself on a level with Secretary Bayard, who has insisted upon jumping over his head, to the government of Great Britain, much to the disgust of Canadians. Mr. Bayard very sensibly refuses to deal with any but the treaty-making power when discussing violations of the reaty, but the Honorable George E. Foster says that he cannot conceive of a diplomat of Mr. Bayard's reputation denying the right of Canada to defend her fisheries. It is evident that this statement is made to hurt Mr. Bayard and has no substantial reasoning back of it. It is simply a return blow at our secre-tary for his offense against the dignity of the Canadian in retusing to argue with him.
"Donying the right of Canada to defend her fisheries" is a sounding phrase; but what right claimed by Canada has been denied? Simply the right to interpret a treaty, made with a power to whose control Canada avows submission, and the right to defend that interprelation by force of arms. The Honorable learge says that the Canadian government is as well able to enforce treaty rights negotiated by Great Britain as is the latter power. That may be, but has nothing to do with our dealings in the matter; we are only concerned with the interpretation put upon the treaty by the treaty making power. It that is the Canada ; if not, it is a matter between them. But in any case we cannot argue with Mr. Foster so long as his country is tied to the apron string of Victoria. The whole business nust afford huge satisfaction to the English who have been in constant fear of a breaking cose of the overgrown provinces, and their addition to the "greater Britain beyond the Edda Stinied, was a member of the famous Harmony society, of Economy, Beaver county, and the sen of members of that society; but in 1831 he left it to get married, the rules enjoining cellbacy. He filed a claim for services up to the date of his resignation and then died. Fifty-one years after the time of the resignation the claim of $5.00 had risen to $30,000. On Monday the case, which has become famous, was argued before the supreme court of the United States. George Shiras, jr., counsel for the society, plead the statue of limitation. The plaintiffs, represented by Governor Hoadly, of Oulo, held that Speldel was forced out of the society by the absurd rules and tyrannical government of George Rapp, the founder, that the scelety was tused on fraud, and kept alive by terrorism. The case is similar to one brought sgainst them many years ago by one Schreiber, during the trial of which the fact was brought out that the society was worth $8, 000,000 and its membership was only thirty-five. The members are all Second Adventists, believing in the speedy coming of the millennium, and they refuse to make any pro-paration for the disposing of the tund on the ground that the coming celestial interposi-tion would make such work useices.

A NOTABLE number of the INTELLIGEN-CER Will be issued to morrow. Two Lancas ter business men who started with no capital but energy and intelligence, and who now possess one of the largest business houses of Lancaster, are sketched along with faithful pictorial representations of them. "Uncas" gives his opinion of Miss Murfree's novels, and incidentally alludes to the high place he'd by James Russell Lowell in current literature Jerry Cruncher" has a most admirable original story that makes rare reading of a winter night, "Jack's Christmas" is an appropriste tale for the week preceding the greatest of holidays. The school board presidents are again taken up in the history of one of the most distinguished occupants of that poet. A continuation of "Seventh Day Observance" is given. The organized charities of the city are discussed in a special article filled with timely information. A pulpit story is told in graphic language, and there are many other good things in this issue of the paper which will make it interesting to
